Keenly played contests marked the start of the mixed doubles event in the New York lawn tennis tournament yesterday, and progress was so rapid that one team, that made up of Miss Marie Wagner and Otto Hinck, advanced to the lower half bracket of the semi-final round. One remarkable contest featured the tournament. In the second round Harry J. Steinkampf and Miss Margaret Grove were forced to an unusually long first set in competition against Mrs. W. J. Eberhard and Willard Botsford. The score was 15—13, and there was a quality of play such as is seldom seen in a mixed doubles event. The strain of the first set was too much for Mrs. Eberhard and her partner and in the second set they were easy victims with the score 6—1.

Mrs. Percy Wilbourn and G. Brinkerhoff triumphed in the first round over Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Damrau with surprising ease, the score being 6—1, 6—2. Miss Carome Winn is paired with Elliott Binzen in this event, and this pair triumphed in a first round encounter over Miss Bessie Holden and E. Salambier at 6—4, 6—4. Miss Winn was steady and severe from the back court, while Binzen did some pretty work at the net. There was one other long contest of the day, in which Mr. and Mrs. Ingo Hartman were defeated. Their opponents, Mrs. Edward Lynch and W. J. Touissant, took the first set at 6—4, but were forced to give over the second at 6—2. In the final set there was a merry struggle that was not ended until the score reached 12—10.

The summaries:

MIXED DOUBLES.—First Round—Mrs. Edward Lynch and W. J. Touissant defeated Mr. and Mrs. Ingo Hartman, 4—6, 6—2, 12—10; Mrs. Percy Wilbourn and G. Brinkerhoff defeated Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Damrau, 6—1, 6—3; Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Pritchard defeated Mr. and Mrs. J. Murray, 8—6, 3—6, 6—4; Miss Carome Winn and Elliott Binzen defeated Miss Bessie Holden and E. Salambier, 6—4, 6—4.

Second Round—Mrs. Samuel Waring and partner won from R. E. Coffey and partner by default; Miss Margaret Grove and H. J. Steinkampf defeated Mrs. W. J. Eberhard and Willard Botsford, 13—15, 6—1; Miss Helene Pollak and J. E. Fox defeated Miss Helen Bernhard and Embrie Henderson, 6—4, 2—6, 6—2; Mrs. Albert Humphries and M. A. Levy defeated Mrs. B. Stenz and J. Sachs, 7—6, 6—1, 6—3; Miss Blanche Brine and Frank Oliver won from Miss M. Lowerre and Vincent Richards by default; Miss Marie Wagner and Otto Hinck defeated Mrs. Embrie Henderson and J. H. Stewart, 6—2, 6—2.

Third Round—Miss Marie Wagner and Otto Hinck won from Miss Blanche Brine and Frank Oliver by default.

LEASE OF 25 YEARS IN WEST SIDE PLAN

END OF LONG FIGHT SEEN

All Parties in Interest Will Discuss Compromise Scheme—Service Board to Have Charge.

A comprehensive plan covering all the points involved in the west side improvement was completed yesterday by the joint committee of the Public Service Commission and the Board of Estimate. The plan will be the basis on which the whole subject will be discussed at public hearings to begin at 10:30 o'clock on Oct. 18 in the City Hall. At this hearing all will be heard—representatives of the New York Central, the Citizens' Union, the City Club, the West Side Association, and other organizations which objected to various phases in the plan of the Committee on Port and Terminal of the Board of Estimate and of citizens generally.

Out of this wide discussion it is believed that a plan approved at least by the major interests involved will be adopted, that work on the improvement will begin early in the coming year, and that it will be completed within five years. That whatever changes are made in the present amended plan will be minor ones, and that the scheme as a whole will be acceptable to the New York Central Railroad is fairly certain, for the reason that Vice President Place of the railroad company has been in close touch with the committee since the conferences began.

The creation of the committee followed the enactment of the law last Winter providing that if no agreement on the matter should be reached by Dec. 1 the Public Service Commission should have absolute control of it. It has been estimated that the improvement will cost anywhere from $45,000,000 to $65,000,000.

City to Retain Waterfront.

The point that aroused the greatest amount of objection was the suggestion that the company should receive in fee simple much of the property now owned by the city, and it was especially argued that waterfront property should be retained by the city, so that terminal facilities, which might be needed by other corporations, should not pass entirely out of public control. The new plan provides that the city shall retain all of the property along the line of the improvement it now owns, that the land needed by the company shall be rented to the company, and that the rental paid shall be readjusted every twenty-five years, with the provision that it shall never be less than the original amount.

The principal features of the present tentative proposal are:

Rental (readjusted every twenty-five years) to be paid by the railroad for the use of public property, or for rights granted, instead of the real estate ownership basis of the plan of 1916.

Location of the railroad so as to coordinate with any future plan for port and terminal development.

City waterfront property and all other necessary property to be leased to and not sold to the railroad.

The railroad to be placed wholly upon city streets or public property, thereby establishing complete municipal control over its rights.

The use of steam and general operation at grade eliminated.

The rights granted to be subject, among other things, to the following: Recapture for municipalization or other public purposes by the city, in which event the payment is to be made for rights granted under the agreement.

The termination of rights at the end of twenty-five years, without compensation therefor, in the event of the city's desire to purchase the railroad improvements.

The use by other railroads of the structure under reasonable terms and conditions.

The enjoyments of rights limited to the corporation under its present charter.

Transfer of rights by the railroad prohibited, except to another railroad upon the approval of the Public Service Commission.

Rights granted not to be capitalized either for purposes of rate-making or for sale to the city, or in the event of Federal Government purchase.

Rights under this plan to be provided by an amendment of the ordinance of the City Council of 1847; no other deed or grant by the city.

The principal railroad features are: Connection of the west side tracks with the Grand Central Station for passenger service to relieve congestion in the Park Avenue tunnel.

Substantially the same yard and terminal opportunities at Canal Street, in the Thirtieth Street yard, and in the Sixtieth Street yard, as were provided for in the 1916 plan.

Entire removal of freight yards and terminals from the waterfront in Manhattan Valley and the location of this yard under and to the east of the Viaduct.

Elevated structure from Canal Street to Seventy-second Street.

Partial depression of the tracks north of Seventy-second Street under roof for park purposes or a shore drive along Riverside Park.

Plan for City Improvements.

Public Service Commissioner Hervey, said yesterday that under the present proposal the city contemplates making the following municipal improvements:

Construction of a north and south viaduct over the Sixtieth Street yard, with a street connection at some street south of Seventy-second Street, the viaduct connecting with a proposed park boulevard on the north and the marginal avenues on the south.

Construction of a roof over the tracks along Riverside Park, the roof to be used as park area or for a shore drive.

A railroad tunnel under Claremont Hill and a roof over the railroad cut in Fort Washington Park.

The proposal of the committee explains at the outset that it was necessary to carefully study the various plans heretofore prepared and, in order to solve the intricate questions involved, to study also the many objections made to them by persons representing various interests. It explains that the sole purpose of the joint committee was to lay a foundation on which public hearings could intelligently progress, and that the chief thing desired was to be fair to both the city and to the railroad. The requirements of the railroad, it was explained, consist of increased facilities to enable it to care for increasing traffic, and to acquire such rights as would justify it in the large expenditure of money needed for the improvement. The public, the proposal says, is interested primarily in accomplishing four things, as follows:

First, to remove the menace to public safety involved in the surface railroad operation on city streets; second, to permit the improvement of the freight terminal facilities of the railroad so that it may better serve the industries of the city and the commerce of the port, at the same time protecting the public interests, so that such improvement shall not interfere with or obstruct the proper development of the terminal facilities of other railroads; third, to discontinue for reasons of public health and convenience the use of steam within the city limits, and, fourth, properly to protect and preserve the parks and waterfront of the city.

The Interests of the City.

The city and the commission are interested in "procuring for the city increased transportation and freight facilities and in the more effective development of the Port of New York, and from the standpoint of the city and the commission it is important that the west side controversy be so determined that the improvement, when completed, will constitute a part of the port development and not a barrier to it. Moreover, the joint committee should recommend nothing which will not harmonize with the plans and purposes of the New York-New Jersey Port and Harbor Development Commission as the same have been or may be developed."

Then the proposal says:

"In order that the New York Central may not be hampered in financing this large improvement, the committee recognizes the necessity for the granting of rights of adequate duration, and is willing to recommend the authorization of such grants, but only upon condition that they be subject to adequate reservations safeguarding the principle of governmental regulation and control."

Accordingly toward these ends the committee suggests:

"That the railroad be placed upon an elevated structure northward from Canal Street through West Street past Gansevoort Market and along the marginal avenues and through Twelfth Avenue to the Sixtieth Street yard. The committee has considered various treatments south of Fifty-ninth Street, but the plan for an elevated structure, in the opinion of the committee, is flexible and meets the needs of the situation because of the city's reserved right hereinafter set forth to municipalize the elevated structure or to add thereto additional tracks for the purpose of a municipal railroad; or to permit other railroads to share the structure with the New York Central, subject, however, to proper recognition of the fact that the structure would be erected at the expense of the New York Central, which should be suitably reimbursed in the event that it is deprived of the exclusive use of the structure or any part thereof."

The proposal continues:

That north of Seventy-second Street and south of 119th Street the railroad remain west of the line of the present park wall. No part of the land which is now included in the park area east of the present right of way between these two streets is to be encroached on in any way by the railroad. Tracks in addition to those now in use shall, except from 119th to 129th Street, be laid west of the present tracks.

That the railroad have the right to lay six tracks from Seventy-second to 129th Street, two of which shall be for passenger service and connected with the Grand Central Terminal.

That the railroad sell and convey to the city with proper warranty of title at a fair market value the fee of all lands in its present right of way to which it has a good title, and the lands so acquired shall be opened as a park thoroughfare.

At 119th Street the tracks will leave the present right of way and be constructed in a tunnel under Claremont Hill to 129th Street, passing thence over Manhattan and 129th Streets on a viaduct structure. This can be done for the most part without disturbing the park surface.

Treatment Along Riverside Park.

That the tracks be sufficiently lowered along Riverside Park to substantially retain the park contour, permit park treatment, or the building on the roof and through the park of a shore drive and promenade, or a combination of both. The committee recommends the use of the roof over the tracks as a short drive and promenade, thus affording a new north and south highway in extension of Twelfth Avenue, following in the main the present right of way of the railroad, until it joins Riverside Drive at about 129th Street. In order to provide for passenger service the committee recommends that a right similar to that herein provided be granted the railroad to connect with the Grand Central Terminal through a subway in some street south of Seventy-second and such avenues as shall be required to make the necessary connection.

Between Seventy-second Street and 129th Street, wherever the railroad has at present the right to use land along Riverside Park for railroad purposes and does not own the fee of the land, it may be fair that no rental charge be made for the continued use of this right; and where the railroad curves off its present right of way at about 119th Street, as previously described, no charge for rental be made for so much of the tunnel tracks as equal the lineal extent of tracks now validly used, and which under the plan here proposed will be abandoned.

That the southerly terminal shall be located north of Canal Street and over and east of West Street substantially as proposed in the 1916 plans except as necessarily modified to connect to an elevated structure in West Street as herein proposed.

That the Thirtieth Street Yard remain as at present located and substantially as heretofore planned, except that surface occupation in getting across Twelfth Avenue and the marginal way to transfer bridges and piers shall be reduced as far as practicable from an engineering and operating standpoint. Overhead rights in streets therein shall be granted in the same manner as street surface rights.

That the railroad company have substantially the same facilities in the Sixtieth Street Yard as were proposed in the plans of 1916; land in the yard now owned by the city is to be leased and not conveyed in fee to the company; as to streets and avenues through the yard, the city shall agree, during the period in which the agreement remains in force, not to use such streets and avenues at their surface grade, retaining, however, the fee in said streets, and the railroad being charged a rental for the land contained within lines of streets and avenues throughout the Sixtieth Street Yard. A north and south viaduct between Fifty-seventh and Seventy-second Streets for the main part over Twelfth Avenue, and an east and west viaduct over one of the cross streets easterly from Twelfth Avenue shall be constructed by the railroad as a municipal improvement, to be paid for by the city, and the track and yard layouts shall be modified from the Port and Terminal Committee's plan in so far as is necessary to permit this construction.

That the main line of tracks be diverted to the east of the present right of way at about 119th Street, extending in a tunnel under Claremont Hill to 129th Street, passing thence over Manhattan and 129th Streets on a viaduct structure adjacent to and west of the present Riverside Drive Viaduct; thence continuing and descending to approximately the grade of the present right of way near 141st Street; 138th Street to be carried over the tracks. It is proposed to locate the Manhattanville Yard under and on the easterly side of the Riverside Drive Viaduct on the property bounded on the east by Broadway, on the south by 129th Street and Manhattan Street and extending northerly at Broadway to about 131st Street and at Twelfth Avenue to about 134th Street, thereby entirely eliminating the railroad yard from the river front.

That north of Manhattanville Valley the railroad remain on its present right of way to the north boundary of Fort Washington Park, to which right of way, however, the city acquires the fee; the tracks to be six in number to approximately the southerly limit of Fort Washington Park and four through the park; the cut through Fort Washington Park to be roofed by the railroad as a municipal improvement and charged against the city; all tracks north of Manhattanville Valley to be laid in such manner as to afford opportunity for the same treatment in this area as through Riverside Park.

"In order that the city may provide either now or hereafter for roofing construction, including filling or other public improvements, elsewhere in this area by municipal expenditure the right will be reserved under these proposals for such improvements. It will be noted that the present proposals of the committee are confined to the railroad's operation to the northerly limits of Fort Washington Park, leaving for consideration at the public hearings the policy with respect to changes north of that park which must include a solution of the grade crossing at Dykman Street.

Rights for the Railroad.

"That the railroad operate south of the north line of Ft. Washington Park on city owned streets or park land. The railroad is to have the right to use this city owned land for railroad purposes during its present corporate existence, which right shall not be transferable by it without the consent of the Public Service Commission, and shall be dependent upon the continued existence of the company's charter. The railroad company shall have no right to grant away or sublet all or any part of its right, nor to mortgage it in such manner that it may be sold on foreclosure, except to a railroad corporation within the jurisdiction and control of the Public Service Commission, and any new rights shall be an integral part of its present charter, so as to be subject to the legislative will under the power reserved when the charter was granted."

Concerning the annual compensation the company shall pay the city for the facilities granted, the proposal suggests that it be fixed at a stipulated amount for each foot of track to be used under the new contract, in addition to such rights as the company now validly holds. Any rights accorded by the city shall be held by the company for twenty-five years, when they shall terminate. In default of a new agreement the city shall pay the company the fair value of any of its rights. The city retains the right, after the twenty-five-year period, to municipalize the tracks and structures and use them itself or lease them to others for railroad purposes. These provisions have been inserted merely to accentuate the fact that the city does not intend to surrender any of its realty or right of way.

The proposals contain the usual limitations in similar leases, covering default in payments, the failure of the railroad to operate trains, or its suspension from business. The improvement, it is provided, shall be under the supervision and control of the Public Service Commission.

Pledges of the Company.

Under the proposal the company covenants:

(1) To discontinue the use of steam as a motive power in the City of New York.

(2) To abandon all present rights or claim of rights in any of the streets and avenues of New York City not required by the new plan.

To erect for account of the city the roof or covering of its tracks, and, if required, to construct the shore drive and promenade thereon; and similarly to construct the viaducts over the Sixtieth Street yard.

To operate skillfully and diligently and in the manner prescribed by law its trains in the City of New York.

To credit the city's account with a sum equivalent to the cost of bridges and making of streets as to the building of which the railroad is now obligated, but from which obligation it will be relieved by the new plan.

The city covenants to pay the company for land in its present right of way which it owns, to pay for the construction of any roof or covering over any right of way now held by the company and for the viaducts over the Sixtieth Street yard; to grant to the company special privileges for ducts, tunnels, spurs, &c., and facilities for handling passenger traffic, and to lease such land as the needs of the company may demand. As to the leasing of land the proposal says:

That the leases of land or land under water along the right of way be subject to surrender by the railroad without compensation except for the actual cost of the structures thereon and the removal thereof, in the event of all or any part of the said lands so leased being required for the opening of streets or avenues, the marginal way or other public improvement.

That the fixing of rentals at readjustment periods or of values of improvements when and if said leases are terminated be in the same manner and by agreement or arbitration as provided in the case of street rights.

That the granting of a lease in no way make the city liable for the loss of the use and occupation of the lessee's estate therein, should the city's title fail, and shall not make the city liable to the company for any damages whatever; nor shall such leases be deemed to authorize any structure thereon which will in any manner directly injure surrounding owners so as to make the city liable therefor, except with the express consent and agreement of the city.

Rights of Both Parties.

During the conferences of the committee there was much discussion as to the method of making the necessary grants. The committee finally decided that the best way of doing this would be by modifying the ordinance of 1847, under which the present rights acquired by the company were granted, so as to fit the present situation.

"By the modification of this ordinance in conformity with the new contract," the proposal says, "the necessary rights could be granted upon a basis of sufficient permanency to protect the railroad company in the improvement which it is called upon to make, and at the same time the rights thus granted, while remaining subject to the legislative control of the company's charter, would be based upon a contract between the city and the railroad and within the control of the municipal authorities. This would be in accordance with sound principles of home rule, and would place the railroad's right on a basis of sufficient certainty and duration to justify the large expenditure it must make in carrying out the contract."

Concerning the possible need of arbitration in the adjustment of differences between the city and the company, and the valuation of new rights, the proposal suggests:

In the event that as to the adjustment of compensation or upon the partial or complete termination of the rights, the fixing of sums to be paid, and other matters as to which arbitration shall become necessary, that the arbitration be effected in the manner provided in the dual subway contracts, it being expressly stipulated and agreed, however, that as far as such arbitration affects future compensation to be paid by the railroad company the same shall be deemed the means of fixing compensation agreed upon by the parties and not as an adjudication of legal rights, and that so far as said arbitration affects compensation for property surrendered, rights terminated or affected, it shall be deemed a means of computing the amount to be paid and not of determining the rights of the parties; and that any sum so determined upon shall, if it be within the purview of the undertaking given by the railroad company, be deemed to fix the liability under said undertaking.

That provisions be inserted that, for the purpose of fixing rates, the company shall be limited to the cost of the improvements without any allowance for the value of the rights granted.

That provision be made that in case of the purchase by the national, State or municipal government, the company shall not claim an amount in excess of the actual cost of improvements or claim any allowance for value of rights granted under the new contract.

That to safeguard these provisions the commission, in connection with the supervision of the work, ascertain and fix the cost of new construction with proper safeguards, insuring the review of the amount so fixed by arbitration or otherwise as well as fix the value of existing property at the time the construction begins under the new plan.

The members of the joint committee are Charles S. Hervey, Chairman, and Travis H. Whitney, representing the Public Service Commission, and Borough President Marcus M. Marks, Maurice E. Connolly, and Calvin D. Van Name, representing the Board of Estimate. William L. Ransom, chief counsel of the commission, represented the committee.

COAL PRODUCTION DECLINES SHARPLY

Operators Say They Are in Despair Because of Labor Disturbances.

BITTER AT ADMINISTRATION

Assert Coal Diminished as Soon as Washington Fixed the Prices.

In the face of a greater need of coal than ever before, the coal production is sharply diminishing and many coal operators are in despair because of the price-fixing regulations of the Government, according to the current issue of Black Diamond, a coal trade publication, which sums up the situation in these words:

"Industries are starving for coal. Retailers and householders are trying to get it, but cannot. And production of coal is being sharply curtailed by labor disturbances. The coal situation is as nearly hopeless as we can possibly picture it.

"To sum it all up in a word, there is this contrast between this year and last. Last year the danger of a coal shortage became apparent on Sept. 15. It did not become an actuality until the first week in December. This year an actual coal famine developed in the Chicago market on Sept. 10."

The output of coal began to diminish as soon as the President's order was issued fixing the price of coal on the basis of $2 a ton, it is stated. A series of incidents beginning at that time and lasting to the present is sketched as follows to show the effect of the order in cutting down production:

"The same week (when the President's order was announced) one operator in the Illinois field closed his mine until further notice. In the same week something like ten different producing districts announced that unless prices were modified they would close their mines in a short while. They proposed to continue to operate at a loss until there was time for a readjustment.

"The following week important operators in Northern Central Pennsylvania announced the abandonment of plans to increase production by making additional outlays of capital. The immediate and tangible result of all this is shown in a few incidents which arose in Chicago on Tuesday and Wednesday, Sept. 11 and 12. The Sanitary District of Chicago exists to pump the sewage of Chicago through the drainage canal. To do that it needs coal. It couldn't get it readily so it began to appeal to the Priority Board at Washington for a ruling which would allow it to get coal in preference to other users.

"On Tuesday, Sept. 11, the representative of an Eastern steel company came into the Illinois and Indiana market to try to buy some coal. Its steel is needed by the army, the navy and the railroads. It had been unable to get a sufficient quantity of coal and some time ago offered an Eastern coal operator a premium of $2 a ton if he would break a contract with another concern. Such negotiations having failed, it came into the Chicago market for coal. It got none.

"On Wednesday, Sept. 12, a manufacturer in necessity came into the Chicago market to buy 1,000 tons of coal for delivery between Sept. 15 and the first of next April. He wanted only twenty cars of coal. He worked all day Wednesday. At 5 o'clock in the evening, having made the rounds of the entire trade, he reported that he had not been able to buy a single car. On Wednesday, Sept. 12, a user of steam coal, after having spent two weeks trying to buy a considerable tonnage, went to several coal companies and said:

"'Ship me any coal you can get and tell me about it afterward. Put down a blanket order for anything that comes your way and let me have it.'"

The Black Diamond goes on to say:

"There is no intention to disguise the fact that the coal men are extremely bitter as a result of events in Washington. The writer of this review has been conversant with coal developments for twenty years. He has known coal men intimately. He has had quite a good deal to do with coal companies. At no time has he seen coal men in such a state of mind. Some are in despair. Many are looking for something else to do.

"The American Government has fixed a price and said that the coal problem is solved. Hence the coal business could go on as usual and everybody get a supply. But it hasn't gone on. It cannot, because the miners aren't there, and those who remain are in no mood to work. The cars aren't available to move coal, because nobody this Summer produced cars and engines to increase the supply. Also, coal operators have been so often taken from their business to fight the Government and to quarrel with politicians that they have had little time to exercise that careful supervision which alone can increase production under difficulties."

WOMAN IN LAW FACULTY.

Columbia Names Miss Witte, a Practicing Attorney, as Instructor.

For the first time in the history of the Columbia Law School, the school has opened an academic year with a woman instructor. Miss Mabel E. Witte has been appointed an instructor of law and will give a course of lectures this Fall, not exactly as a part of the law school, but under the department of extension teaching. Significance is attached to the appointment as a big step in the long fight to secure the admission of women as students in the law school. The prediction is made in some quarters at Columbia that women will shortly be admitted to the regular courses of the law school.

The unprecedented appointment of a woman instructor is directly due to the war. The new course is said to be of especial value to women left during the war to manage their own affairs or to act in place of men. It is "for persons, whether engaged in secretarial work, business, social work, or of no definite occupation, who desire a knowledge of legal questions for practical purposes and for general culture."

Miss Witte is a graduate of Vassar College and of the New York Law School, and has been a practicing attorney for six years. "Our aim at Columbia," said Miss Witte yesterday, "is not to make every woman her own lawyer, but to point out the usual pitfalls, so that she will not make any missteps in the conduct of her affairs."

FREIGHT HANDLERS STRIKE.

Demand Increase from $18 to $21 a Week.

Fifty freight handlers employed by the New England Steamboat Company at Piers 14 and 15, North River, quit work yesterday morning because the company had refused their demand for an increase in wages of $3 a week. They had been getting $18 a week and wanted $21. The strikers said they would not return until the increase was granted.

An official of the company said last night that new men would be engaged to take the places of the strikers, and business would not suffer in any way.

Plea for Widow in Need.

The Widowed Mothers' Fund Association, 192 Bowery, repeats an appeal for contributions toward a fund of $200, to make a young widow with one small child self-supporting. She cannot go out to work on account of defective eyesight. She suffers with a withering of the optic nerve, but can supervise a helper and two machines, one for hemstitching and one for buttonholing, as this was her trade before marriage. She lost her husband and one baby in February of this year, and has been too ill to work until now. This fund will put the woman on her feet, and keep her self-supporting. Gifts may be sent to Mrs. Henry Zuckerman, 52 Broadway, or to the rooms of the association. Thanks are offered to the following in response to a previous appeal: A Conscripted Soldier, From Cash, Sympathy, and Blank, $5 each; Kodak, H. B. L., and G. S. W., $2 each; Max, Blank, L. K., L. L. B., and Anon, $1 each.

Exceptional opportunity for gentleman with $100,000 to make an investment and handle the New York end, if desired, of a transportation and export business. The advertiser, (American,) having an established business in one of the West Indian Islands, (now a protectorate of the United States,) has under construction a steamboat which is about ready to launch; by means of this boat I will control the commerce of a rich interior country for a distance of 100 miles, the various products of which have at present no outlet, therefore can be purchased at very low prices and transported by this boat to the coast for shipment to the United States very cheaply. I am now shipping tropical products and have contracts with the best concerns here. I need capital to expand and take advantage of present conditions. The profits in this business are most unusual, and would be doubted if I were to state them in an advertisement. An idea can be gotten of same by my statement that the freight business and purchase of tropical products can be monopolized for a distance of 100 miles from the coast in one of the richest tropical sections on earth. I have proof of every statement I make, my bank and business references are first class, all being concerns with whom I am now doing business. A one-half interest will be given for the above investment; no control, however, will be given. I desire to deal with principals only. Replies to this advertisement must be accompanied by references of the sender, as I must know with whom I am dealing before disclosing my business. All replies will be considered absolutely confidential and letters returned if requested. A 402 Times Annex.

Are you looking for a good unusual opportunity? Because my age does not justify any longer to handle my two 11-year established businesses, trading all over the country, I offer you one, with or without outstanding, provided you have a minimum of $10,000 to pay for it. I am not a faker. This is the first time in my twenty-five years of business to advertise, and my highest financial standing, books, and bank account justify this a real opportunity. Reference expected if more information is desired. No agencies. W 356 Times Downtown.

MISS PEARY, ONE OF MANY BRIDES OF DAY

Rear Admiral's Daughter Weds Capt. Edward Stafford in St. John's Church, Washington.

CHARLES P. TAFT, 2D, WEDS

Ex-President's Son Marries Miss Eleanor Chase—Nuptials of the Misses Gould, Brown, and Edgar.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 6.—The marriage of Miss Marie Ahnighito Peary, only daughter of Rear Admiral Robert E. Peary, U. S. N., to Captain Edward Stafford, Coast Artillery, U. S. R., took place this afternoon at St. John's Church, Lafayette Square, with the rector, the Rev. Dr. Roland Cotton-Smith officiating.

The floral decoration of Australian ferns and white chrysanthemums extended throughout the body of the church, with clusters of bride roses on the altar.

The bridal procession was led by the military ushers who, like the bridegroom, wore the uniform of the reserve army. They were Lieutenant Sydney Cook, Lieutenant John Putnam Loomis, Lieutenant Whitney Landon, all brother officers of the bridegroom; Professor Albert Lieklider and Chauncey Loomis of Syracuse, N. Y., and Robert E. Peary, Jr., brother of the bride.

The bridesmaids and matron of honor, all wearing gowns of hydrangia blue faille and tulle, with picture hats, were Miss Emily Steuart, Miss Helen Blodgett, Miss Laura Graves, Miss Jean Holmes, and Mrs. Broderick Rafter, all of Washington.

The bride, escorted by her father in full dress uniform, wore a trailing gown of ivory satin with veil of rose point, which fell from a coronet of orange blossoms almost to the end of her court train. She carried white orchids and lilies. The bridegroom had his father, Justice Wendell P. Stafford, as best man.

A reception at the Peary home in Wyoming Avenue followed the ceremony.

Captain Stafford and his bride expect to pass the next two months at Old Point Comfort, Va., where he is attached to the artillery school of Fort Monroe.

Bride of Lieutenant Ayres, U. S. A.

The Church of the Epiphany was the scene of another military wedding this afternoon, with Miss Dorothy Adams, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. S. S. Adams, and Lieutenant William Ayres, U. S. A., as the contracting parties. The ceremony took place at 5 o'clock, with the rector of the church, the Rev. Dr. Randolph H. McKim, who officiated at the marriage of the bride's parents, reading the impressive service.

The bride was escorted by her father and preceded her sister, Miss Mildred Adams, as maid of honor, with the following bridesmaids: Miss Lida Adams, also a sister; Miss Katherine Effinger, Miss Brownie Johnson, Miss Pauline Stone, all of this city, and Miss Lillian Jackson of New York. Dr. Daniel Leroy Borden acted as best man. The ushers were Dr. Frank D. Adams of Boston, brother of the bride; Capt. Alfred B. Quinton, Captain Edwin B. Spiller, Captain Fritz P. Lind, Captain William C. Young, and Lieutenant Fairfax Downey, all of the United States Army, and Lieutenant Earl H. Walker, United States Reserve.

Charles P. Taft, 2d, Weds at 19.

Special to The New York Times.

WATERBURY, Conn., Oct. 6.—Rose Hill Cottage, the palatial home of Irving H. Chase, the head of many industries in this portion of the State, was the scene of an interesting wedding tonight, when Miss Eleanor Kellogg Chase, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chase, became the bride of Charles Phelps Taft, 2d, U. S. A., the son of former President William H. Taft and Mrs. Taft of New Haven.

The Rev. Robert E. Brown of the Second Church performed the ceremony in the presence of a notable gathering.

The bride was attended by her four sisters. Mrs. James R. Sheldon, Jr., was matron of honor, and Miss Lucia Hosmer Chase, maid of honor. The young Misses Elizabeth Irving and Dorothy Mather Chase acted as flower girls.

Lieutenant Walter Wolf, U. S. A., of New York, was best man. The ushers were Robert A. Taft, a brother of the bridegroom; Captain S. Kellogg Plume, and Ensign Robert A. Holden.

The house was decorated with Autumnal flowers and foliage, also with the Stars and Stripes.

Among the guests at the wedding, besides the parents of the bridal pair, were Miss Helen Taft, Dean of Bryn Mawr; Mr. and Mrs. Charles P. Taft and Professor Semple of Cincinnati, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Waters Taft of New York, Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. Lippitt of Providence, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Carr of Boston, Captain Frank W. Kellogg, U. S. N., retired; Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Clark of Hartford, and Otto Barnard of New York.

Miss Gould Weds Ensign Tuttle.

Special to The New York Times.

UTICA, N. Y., Oct. 6.—Miss Eleanor Churchill Gould, only daughter of G. H. P. Gould, millionaire paper manufacturer of Lyons Falls, and Ensign Donald Stewart Tuttle, son of Mrs. Benjamin E. Chase of 205 West Eighty-ninth Street, New York City, were married at noon today at the home of the bride, near this city. The Rev. William C. Spicer of Gloversville, assisted by the Rev. M. S. Grimes of Lyons Falls, performed the ceremony.

The bride wore a rose-colored traveling costume of duvetin, topped by a large silk beaver hat, and a corsage bouquet of white orchids. She was attended by Miss Katherine Nye of Niagara Falls, who was in blue serge, with a large brown hat, and carried a black shepherd's crook. Lieutenant Ward Clark of Oneida, an officer in the Fiftieth Infantry, now at Syracuse, served as best man.

Mr. Tuttle is station at the New York Navy Yard, and received four days' furlough for his wedding. He wore his dress uniform.

The ushers included Lieutenant Robert Van Buskirk of Fort Totten, Andrew W. Kelly, Jr., of Syracuse, and Ensigns Albert Billings and Leonard Kirby, Jr., of the New York Navy Yard.

The couple received many handsome presents. The bridegroom's gift to his bride was a gold wrist watch set with diamonds, and Mrs. Tuttle presented her husband with a gold military wrist watch. The gift of the bride's father was a superb pearl necklace.

A breakfast for seventy-five guests followed the ceremony. Mrs. Gould, the bride's mother, was in black velvet, and Mrs. Chase wore gray crepe.

Swasey—Brown.

Lieutenant McNeal Swasey of the Officers' Reserve Corps, a son of Mrs. Irene McNeal Swasey of 117 West Fifty-eighth Street, New York, and Miss Eva Ingersoll Brown, the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walston Hill Brown and granddaughter of Mrs. Robert G. Ingersoll, and the late Colonel Ingersoll, celebrated their nuptials yesterday afternoon at the country estate of the Browns, Wallston, at Dobbs Ferry. The ceremony was performed at 3:30 by Dr. John Lovejoy Elliott of the Ethical Culture Society, assisted by Dr. David Saville Muzzey of Columbia University.

The bride, who walked with her father, wore a gown of old point lace, worn by several generations of her family, over white satin. The train being also of old point lace. The tulle veil was held by orange blossoms. Her flowers were lilies of the valley and white rosebuds, and she wore a diamond pendant and a necklace of pearls, both wedding gifts.

Her only attendant was Miss Phyllis W. Brown, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Q. Brown of Dobbs Ferry, who wore a gold cloth gown veiled with brown tulle.

The best man was Mason Starring, Jr., and the ushers were Robert Ingersoll Brown, the bride's brother; Captain Robert L. Bigelow, Hamilton Rowan, Lee French, Lieutenant Avery Elliott, Lieutenant Stone, and Lieutenant Bacon. The ceremony was followed by a reception attended by about 200 guests, many coming from New York on a special train.

After a brief honeymoon Lieutenant Swasey will go to Yaphank. He and his bride will take a cottage at Belleport, L. I., for the present.

Captain Henry A. Riley Marries.

The wedding of Captain Henry Alsop Riley, son of Mrs. Henry A. Riley of this city, and Miss Mary Chapman Edgar, the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Stuart Edgar, also of this city, was solemnized at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon in the Brick Presbyterian Church, Fifth Avenue and Thirty-seventh Street. The pastor, the Rev. Dr. William Pierson Merrill, performed the ceremony. An American flag each side of the pulpit formed the only decoration.

The bride wore a close-fitting princess robe of cream satin, the low top having a bertha of old Honiton lace worn also by her mother when she married, and long net sleeves. The veil of hand-made net was bordered with Honiton lace and arranged across the back of her coiffure. The bride's attendants were the Misses Priscilla and Eleanor Lockwood, Sarah Cheney, Mary L. Wooddin, Ann Parke of Montrose, Penn., and Lydia Comstock, a cousin of the bride. The bridesmaids wore cream colored net and chiffon frocks, with girdles of Chinese blue, matching their Chinese blue velvet hats, which had sprays of Chinese flowers at one side. They wore also the bride's gifts, jade pendants suspended on blue cords, and carried pink chrysanthemums.

Dr. Riley's best man was his brother Wells Littlefield Riley, now with the Sixth Battery at Plattsburg, and the ushers were Morgan Riley, another brother; Captain Gaillard Ravenel, 306th Field Artillery; Lieutenant Lucius Bigelow, Lieutenant Newton Durham, Captain Stewart W. Cramer, United States Cavalry; Gerald Mygatt, Kenneth F. Luthy, and Addison A. Van Tine. The bride's only brother, James A. Edgar, was unable to serve as an usher, he being a Second Lieutenant and abroad.

The ceremony was followed by a small reception at the home of the bride's parents, 127 East Seventieth Street.

Dr. Riley, who is a medical officer of Squadron A, is in the Medical Corps of the United States Army, and expects to go to Spartanburg and will take his bride there. He was graduated from Yale in 1908 and later from the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Miss Taylor Weds Lieutenant Statler.

Miss Edna Elizabeth Taylor, daughter of Mrs. Richard V. Taylor of Philadelphia, was married to Lieutenant De Camp Statler, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Lowry W. Statler of Cincinnati and New York, yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock, in the North Presbyterian Church, West 155th Street. The Rev. Dr. John Mackay performed the ceremony.

Lieutenant Statler is stationed at Camp Upton, and at the wedding a cablegram of congratulations from his only brother, who is with the New York Base Hospital Unit No. 9, somewhere in France, was read.

The bride was in brown chiffon velvet and Russian sables, and carried orchids and lilies of the valley. She was attended by Miss Edith Littauer of this city. Richard V. Taylor of Germantown, Penn., was his brother's best man.

A. H. Boyd Weds Miss Belwin.

Miss Felice S. Belwin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Belwin of 14 Central Park West, and Arthur H. Boyd, publisher of The Daily News and The Sunday Times of New Brunswick, N. J., were married yesterday afternoon in the chapel of St. Bartholomew's Church, the Rev. Percy Gordon officiating. A breakfast followed at the Biltmore.

Mr. Boyd first met his bride on a steamer returning from London. Mrs. Boyd is a native of San Francisco, and came to New York five years ago at the invitation of Charles Dana Gibson, for whom she was a model.

DIVORCES APPELBAUM.

Wife of Humanitarian Cult Leader Gets a Decree in Reno.

Mrs. Ima Appelbaum, wife of Misha Appelbaum, founder of the Humanitarian Cult, obtained a divorce in Reno, Nev., yesterday on the grounds of mental cruelty. She received the custody of their young son, and Mr. Appelbaum was ordered to pay $150 a month toward their support.

Mrs. Appelbaum in her suit alleged that her husband ridiculed her, disliked to be seen with her in public gatherings, and otherwise humiliated her. She said he carried a little book entitled "Foolish Things My Wife Has Had," which he often showed to his friends. She said that her husband's harsh mental treatment started soon after their marriage in 1906.

When Mr. Appelbaum was asked yesterday about the granting of the divorce, he asked that he be quoted as follows:

"Mrs. Appelbaum is a lovely and charming woman. She is the mother of my boy, whom I dearly love. That is all I care to say."

Education Notes.

The Isaac Pitman Shorthand Writers' Association announces free courses in shorthand to be given at the Brooklyn Training School for Teachers, beginning Oct. 13.

The Board of Examiners invites applications for license as substitute teacher of cooperative commercial branches, merchandising &c., in high schools. Both men and women are invited to apply. The examination will consist of a brief written paper, followed by an oral interview; the candidate's personality, including use of English, will be noted. The compensation is $4 a day of actual service.

Important changes have been made in the Children's Lectures of the American Museum of Natural History, beginning Oct. 15, which bring them in closer touch with the public school system. The rearrangement was made after conferences with many local educators. Under the new order the schedules have been more adapted to the hours of instruction in the schools, and while the course has been extended, the number of lectures a week has been reduced from three to two, so as to give the teachers a better opportunity to assemble their classes for a visit to the Museum. These lectures are given in the auditorium of the institution at 4 o'clock in the afternoon on Mondays, Tuesdays, and Thursdays and cover a period from Oct. 15 to Jan. 24. In conformity with the general policy of the Museum to promote patriotism, the new course will have special reference to the history and development of the United States. A new feature is the plan of co-operation between the American Museum of Natural History and the Metropolitan Museum of Art, in which these institutions will co-operate in giving instruction in allied topics. The first course, under the new auspices, will be devoted to the evolution of clothing.

The afternoon of Oct. 18 has been set aside as Alumni Day at the new Poly Prep School at Dyker Heights, Brooklyn. The hostesses of the occasion will be Mrs. Alexander M. White, Mrs. Julius Liebmann, Mrs. Frederic B. Pratt, Mrs. Bruce Stewart Lachlan, Mrs. Henry Joralemon Davenport, Mrs. J. O. Low, Mrs. Joseph Dana Allen, Mrs. H. Austin Tuttle. The committee of arrangements consists of Bruce Stewart Lachlan, William G. Broadway, Jr., and William E. Golden.

The Brooklyn Heads of Department Association will hold a meeting at Grant Hall, 489 Washington Aveune, at 4 P. M. on Oct. 9. Delegates will be elected to the Teachers' Council.

THE WEATHER

WASHINGTON, Oct. 6.—The weather has been generally fair throughout the country during the last twenty-four hours. A cyclonic depression which seems to be losing intensity has advanced to Western Lake Superior. This depression will move eastward during the next forty-eight hours and give scattered rains in the lake region and Northern New England.

In all other districts east of the Mississippi fair weather is indicated, with slowly rising temperature after Sunday.

Winds for Sunday and Monday along the North Atlantic Coast will be fresh northwest, fair; Middle Atlantic Coast, fresh west to northwest, fair; South Atlantic Coast, fresh northeast, fair.

FORECASTS TODAY AND MONDAY.

Eastern New York—Fair Sunday and probably Monday.

Southern New England—Fair and somewhat cooler Sunday. Monday, fair.

New Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania—Fair Sunday and Monday, continued cool.

Western New York—Fair and warmer Sunday. Monday, partly cloudy, probably showers near Lake Erie.

Northern New England—Fair and continued cool Sunday. Monday, partly cloudy.

The temperature record for the twenty-four hours ended at 11 P. M., taken from the thermometer at the local office of the United States Weather Bureau, is as follows:

| | 1916. | 1917. | | 1916. | 1917. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 3 A. M. | 59 | 55 | 4 P. M. | 77 | [illegible] |

Chapeaux La Marquise

$14.50 $14.50

These are hats of unique beauty. They are designed for women who patronize the exclusive,—who seek millinery with perfection of material and dexterity of workmanship as well as the subtle atmosphere of smartness,—yet who favor moderate expenditure.

The collection includes many charming hats for dress, afternoon, dinner and theatre wear,—all well worth seeing.

Specially noteworthy is the group of Semi-Sport Hats designed for wear with tailored costumes. The one illustrated is representative. This hat has a velvet facing and Angora felt top, with a single soft quill as its only adornment.

Set a New Suit Standard and Mark a New Achievement

To embody excellent materials, superior tailoring and cultured smartness of style in suits at a popular figure is a high ambition. We have realized our goal in these new suits, which have the "thoroughbred" air.

The sketch introduces the first of the new models—sartorially correct in every detail. It is made of fine burella cloth with smart, snugly fitting back and sleeves. The small velvet collar rolls high at the neck and buttons picturesquely. Not fur trimmed, this will be of particular interest to the woman who has her own furs.

Serge Dresses Lead in Practical Smartness
For Women, $19.74

Pleats are with us again, lending the grace of the long line to these new frocks. Sleeves that fit the forearm snugly, and white satin roll collars give the slim distinction of the prevailing silhouette.

Illustrated. By its very simplicity this dress achieves its smartness. The broad belt effect and the two large ornamental buttons are new. Pleat d skirt; white satin roll collar Navy serge.

A surplice model of graceful dignity shows long lines in its pleated skirt, long rever collar, shawl satin over-collar and crossing sash. Self covered buttons trim the sash and sleeves. Navy, brown or black serge.

THE RECORD OF CONGRESS.

There has never been a Congressional session in history that approaches the record of the extraordinary session of the Sixty-fifth. Not merely has it made preparation for war on a huge scale, but it has far surpassed the records made by the parliamentary bodies of other democracies on their entrance into this war. Conscription, for instance, was not adopted by Great Britain for two years after the war began. The United States certainly had the advantage of beginning late and of profiting by the mistakes, both of delay and of commission, which other democracies had made. It is much to Congress's credit, however, that it had the sense to profit by these mistakes, for that has seldom been the way of Congress in the past.

Congress has recognized that this war is like no other war, that the country is entering on an untrodden path, and has behaved accordingly. No surer proof could be given that the country is back of the war than the unhesitating and confident way in which Congress has heaped necessary burdens upon it; for Congress is keenly sensitive to public opinion. The noise made by the pacifists and malcontents in the Capitol has been out of all proportion to the results they have achieved, for on important war measures they have never been able to muster more than a handful of votes. The great machine has gone steadily grinding on; steadily, and rapidly, despite the impression of delay created by such incidents as the discreditable attempt of a few men to defeat the Food bill.

Within six weeks after the declaration of war, which had been made within three days after the President informed Congress that a state of war existed between the United States and Germany, the Selective Draft act was passed. It took North and South a year to understand the necessity of conscription in their war. Congress then enlarged the navy and authorized a strength of 162,462 men, and of 30,000 enlisted men for the Marine Corps. Within a month after the declaration of war it had authorized the President to seize all vessels belonging to enemy nations. A month later it passed the Espionage bill, giving the President authority over all ships and full control over exportation. It authorized the expenditure of $750,000,000 to construct a merchant marine and $640,000,000 for the construction of aircraft. It passed the Food Control bill and arranged for the insurance of soldiers and sailors. It authorized loans to allied Governments amounting to $7,000,000,000. It authorized the embargo. It adopted a $2,600,000,000 Revenue bill, disfigured here and there by the marks of haste, as in the case of Section 209, which penalizes professional and salaried man by the unjust imposition of an additional income tax, but which in most other respects bears the imprint of good intent. It authorized the greatest bond issue in our history. The total of its appropriations was $21,390,730,940. It adopted a number of other measures which in any other time would have seemed of great importance, but now are overshadowed by the immensity of those we have here selected for illustration.

What must especially be remembered to the honor of Congress is that all this unprecedented work, done at a dangerous crisis, has been performed without any sign of partisanship, without either the playing of party politics or any display of old partisan antagonisms. In this again Congress has reflected the spirit of the country. There are men in Congress, such as Senator La Follette and Senator Stone, who have roused against themselves a bitter hostility throughout the land; but we do not recall a single comment which has alluded to the fact that Mr. La Follette is a Republican or Mr. Stone a Democrat. The issue has been one of Americanism, and has been the country's temper, there have been new and deep-cut lines, but the old line between Republican and Democrat has been not only obliterated, but actually forgotten, so far as the work of saving the country is concerned. The Sixty-fifth Congress, in its first session, has won a place in history beside which no other session since 1789 can fairly stand.

DR. ELIOT'S PROPOSAL.

Dr. Charles W. Eliot, in the Magazine Section of The Sunday Times this morning, again proposes the holding of an unofficial conference to discuss peace terms. It would be, we suppose, something like the abortive Stockholm Conference, except that it would not be composed of persons who have a strong bond of union and intellectual sympathy, as the Socialists have. That bond, however, did not avail in the case of the Socialists. The total impossibility of getting together so long as the German Government refuses to renounce its bloody ambition was made manifest even to them.

The rock on which an unofficial conference would be sure to split is that the negotiators would not be equal. The people rule in the allied countries. They are ruled by the Government in Germany. The representatives of the Allies would represent the people, that is, the governing body. The representatives of Germany would be merely delegates of autocracy. Though the thing might be in appearance a conference of the peoples, it would be a conference of the peoples of one side and the military autocracy of another. That is precisely the kind of conference on which the United States, for one, will not enter. The German Socialist delegates to Stockholm were as much a part of the Kaiser's military machine as Hindenburg's army. On that rock the conference split. Dr. Eliot supposes that German delegates to another conference, delegates who were not Socialists, would not be open to that impassable objection, and that the same old rock would not split the new conference. We do not agree with him.

Dr. Eliot reveals that he does not want Germany to be defeated, on the curious ground that if overpowered "after desperate resistance, the German mans will remain a source of "anxiety and dread for all Europe." We imagine that a Germany which is not overpowered, which was a menace to all Europe in 1914, will remain a menace to all Europe after a war in which it has been allowed to realize at least some of its war aims. We do not consider it a good argument that we should let Germany retain some of the spoil in order to appease her, for we do not think that would appease her; and if an unofficial peace conference is not for the purpose of discussing how much of the spoil Germany shall retain, then it is useless to discuss it at all at this stage of the war.

Another unusual argument for the unofficial peace conference, put forward by Dr. Eliot, is that "each Government would reveal something of its own state of mind." We know Germany's state of mind, and we hope to change it; that is the reason why we are fighting. In one of Ambrose Bierce's stories a Confederate General asks a captured spy if he came to ascertain the numbers and disposition of the General's forces. "Only their numbers," the spy replies. "Their disposition I already knew. It is morose."

HURRY LOAN SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The official notice that subscriptions to the Liberty Loan are running behind the daily averages necessary for a full subscription must be taken as a hurry call, not as an S O S signal. Hurry is necessary because the time allowed for subscription is shorter than usual, and still shorter when the comparison is with the time necessary to arouse the country. When a loan is in billions, more time is necessary than when it is in millions. Time is particularly necessary when the subscribers are to be counted by millions throughout the country rather than by thousands in the cities. There can be no invitations over the telephone, and acceptances on the instant, as is not unusual for even large private loans taken by hundreds and resold.

The Liberty Loan subscribers are hoped to number ten millions, according to Secretary McAdoo. The cities will do their share this time as before, and as always. Such effort as is necessary must be put forth among country buyers. When the national banks made their report on June 20 it was shown that the growth of the deposits was marked in the country, and the growth of the loans was marked in the cities. The situation as a whole left nothing to be desired, except that the banking capacity of the country was not being fully used at a time when there was a call for it. The situation now calls for expansion in both city and country. The farmers have opportunity to sell their products at an unusually high price, and to turn their crops into bonds at an exceptionally low price. The double operation ought to appeal to them both as men of business and as patriots.

On the other hand, the procedure of the city banks, however natural, is capable of betterment. It has been necessary for Currency Controller Williams to caution them against raising their rate of interest on deposits to discourage withdrawal of deposits [illegible] equal to the Government rate. It is plain that would put the banks into competition with the Government for money, instead of acting as aids to those who would do what it is not suitable for the banks to do. The banks have a resource not available to their customers for helping the loan. Customers cannot rediscount, and the banks can. Also they should, on a larger scale. It is not commendable that bank reserves should lie unused, and should even increase, when bank clearings are increasing at the rate for September of 55 per cent. over 1915 and 5 per cent. more over 1916.

The growth of the clearings is 19 per cent. outside of New York, compared with a decrease of 3 per cent. in New York. Yet the superprosperous country is backward in comparison with the city in taking the loan. If the country is to clear itself of reproach, it should hasten to respond to the hurry call. According to the President, patriotism and profits should not be mentioned together. But prosperity and patriotism may well be coupled. Bankers and farmers, city and country alike, all who pile up their reserves and profits when there is such good business to be done by making money and killing Kaiserism at the same time, all such should have something said to them by the bond salesman.

OUR HOME GUARD.

General Sherrill deserves the support and encouragement of the whole community in his efforts to organize an effective home guard in this State. His is not the most inspiriting job, perhaps, for a patriotic leader anxious to serve his country in time of war, but for the citizens of New York there is nothing much more important now than the establishment of a new, highly trained, and efficient militia under arms to take the place of the National Guard organizations which have been drafted into the Federal army. We are always in need of protection at home. The Adjutant General in his address to the Chamber of Commerce asked for the earnest cooperation of the business men in his new work. It should not be withheld.

The State's soldiers have heroic duty to perform in guarding public property, if it is not quite so glorious as actual war service. The fact that the guards at our great aqueduct were fired upon five times in a single week should be borne in mind. Probably the malcontents who thus express their defiance of the State and the nation are few in number and not very dangerous. But the men they fired upon are doing work of prime importance. It is their duty also to protect the great stores accumulated here for the army abroad. It seems that 10,000 men are too few to do all the work in all parts of the State that is required of the home guard. The number should be increased as quickly as possible. Protection of the aqueducts and bridges, armories and public buildings, and effective co-operation with the Federal Government in its military preparations are essential. The Adjutant General wants the people to give some part of their attention to the work he has in hand. It is beset with difficulties.

THE SEASIDE PARKS.

Since New Yorkers have short memories and a multitude of distractions, they may have forgotten that the acquisition by the city of the seaside parks, about which a great rumpus has lately been made, had long been urged by public-spirited citizens, that there was a strong general public demand for their acquisition, and that Tammany itself instituted the proceedings at which it now pretends to rage. The movement to acquire what is now Rockaway Park began in 1904, when Mr. George B. McClellan was Mayor. The Legislature authorized the Board of Estimate to appropriate $2,500,000 for that purchase. In 1907 the Tammany Board of Estimate voted unanimously to buy Rockaway Park. Mayor McClellan approved a resolution changing the city map, so as to provide for the park, including the lands subsequently got of the Neponsit Realty Company. In the Fall of 1907 the Tammany Board of Estimate tried to get the land at private sale, but finally resolved on condemnation proceedings. On account of the panic the Corporation Counsel was instructed to delay further proceedings till 1909. Then the Tammany Controller, Mr. Metz, did his best to make the city buy Rockaway Park. The loudest present newspaper denouncer of the project then claimed to be its only begetter.

Mr. Coler, then President of the Borough of Brooklyn, held that the Federal Government had title to the land to be acquired. So the matter was referred to the Corporation Counsel, who reported that there was no title in Federal, State, or City Government. This was in October, 1910. Not till then had the Fusion Board of Estimate anything to do with the case. Mr. Dowling, a Tammany Alderman, now a Tammany candidate for a post in the Board of Estimate, introduced the resolution which brought about the purchase of both Rockaway Park and Dreamland Park. In July, 1911, the Joint Stock Budget Committee, composed of Controller Prendergast, Mr. Mitchel, President of the Board of Aldermen, and Mr. McAneny, President of Manhattan, reported in favor of the acquisition of Rockaway Park recommended that it be bought, and that the options offered by the Neponsit Realty Company be accepted, one for private sale of the land to the city for $1,225,000 and the other to sell it to the city at the same price if the award should be greater than that sum. The Board of Estimate, Mayor Gaynor, elected by Tammany, presiding, accepted the options, which were less than the valuation made by three independent appraisers. The Board of Estimate had made sure that the price would not be too great. The price was not and could not be fixed by the board.

After requesting the Corporation Counsel to apply for the appointment of a Condemnation Commission and adopting rules and maps for the condemnation proceedings, the board's part in the matter ceased. Thenceforward the Rockaway Park business was in the hands of Mayor Gaynor's Corporation Counsel and the Condemnation Commission appointed by the Supreme Court. Mr. Mitchel, Mr. Prendergast, Mr. McAneny had no tithe of responsibility for the price fixed by the Commission, approved by the Supreme Court, and accepted without appeal by the Corporation Counsel, Mr. Archibald R. Watson, a lawyer of high standing and devoted to the public interest. The price paid was, in fact, reasonable and fair

Dreamland Park was proposed by the indefatigable Alderman Dowling. A Tammany Board of Aldermen, acting on a popular demand, first resolved on the purchase. The Fusion Board of Estimate approved. The price, $1,014,000, was fixed, as in the case of Rockaway, by a Condemnation Commission. Mayor Mitchel's Corporation Counsel appealed from the confirmation of the award by a Justice of the Supreme Court. The award was set aside and another Condemnation Commission appointed. The Board of Estimate had no hand in fixing the price and is doing all it can to resist what it deems the exorbitant claims of the owners of the land. Not to Senator Reynolds, about whom such an ado has been made, to any other owner of the Dreamland Park property, has the city paid a penny. The Board of Estimate has fought, and will continue to fight them, tooth and nail.

THE ONLY WAY.

The New York Republican County Committee has set an example to the Republican Committees of the other Counties of Greater New York by refusing to approve the nomination of Mr. Bennett. How can any of the other County Committees fail to follow suit? Will it help the Republican Party of Greater New York to inflict another installment of Tammany maladministration upon the city? Will it help the Republican district leaders to disgust the Republican rank and file and to follow exactly the opposite course to that of the most honored national Republican leaders? Is the accident of a primary of more importance than the well-being of the city?

Fusion means honest, capable City Government. Republicans who found their opposition to Mr. Mitchel upon the sacred character of the primary fall into an absurdity. In effect, their conduct would rest upon this theory: Good government is desirable and we desire it, subject to the primary. Imagine a man who should say: "I am against theft, but if the "primary declares for theft, I go "with the primary." The return of Tammany to power means the plundering of the city. If the faint voice of the primary be obeyed, that plundering is sure.

The pretended superstitious reverence for the primary is overdone. The primary is a useful echo of the will of expert politicians, concerting to frame "the will of the people." To prefer its decision to the interests of the community, to make it an excuse for sacrificing enlightened and clean government, is a choice which politicians who know enough to go in when it rains will not make. The mass of the Republican Party of New York is awake to the local and national issues that are at stake. Doubtless the County Committees yet to be heard from will not regard Mr. Bennett and his little primary as more important than the general Republican sentiment and the good of the city. Even the Hon. Jacob Livingston of Brooklyn, no passionate lover of Fusion, will perhaps reflect that the Republicans over there do not exist for the purpose of fattening Mr. McCooey and Mr. Murphy with the spoils and of submitting Brooklyn and the other boroughs to the reign of incompetence, favoritism, and graft.

SUNKEN GARDEN OR MEADOW?

Mr. W. B. Van Ingen, than whom there is no stancher protector of the public parks in New York, urges the transformation of the site of the lower reservoir in Central Park into a broad stretch of meadow land. He contends, in a forceful and interesting way, that nothing more beautiful can be created in a park than an open meadow. With that view we have no quarrel. But the tract covered by the reservoir is not level, and it is of rock formation surmounted and surrounded by solid masonry. Mr. Van Ingen thinks it would be a simple matter to remove all the reservoir walls and regrade. Engineers consulted by the promoters south and the famous fountain of MacMonnies at the north end, are of the contrary opinion. They insist that to make of the reservoir site a meadow-like stretch of lawn would cost many years of labor and a huge sum of money.

The Times has approved of the plan of the Mayor's committee and Mr. Thomas Hastings, as its execution would add greatly to the beauty of Central Park, and there is no hint in the plan as it stands of any invasion of the Park or perversion of the design of its founders. A dozen plans for the invasion of the Park and its practical destruction are centred upon the controversy about the proposed transfer of this site by the Board of Water Supply to the Park Commissioner. Acceptance of the sunken garden plan would at once defeat the aims of the would-be despoilers and secure the gratitude of future generations. The cost would be comparatively small, and much of it would be paid by private subscription. The improvement, with the splendid fountain and lagoon and the terraces with the bandstand, would form a dignified and beautiful memorial of the completion of the greatest engineering work in our history, the Catskill Aqueduct. Mr. Van Ingen, however, is entitled to a respectful hearing on all matters relating to the improvement and care of our parks. His own argument is lucid, and we cheerfully give space to it.

LINCOLN AS HE WAS.

One Who Knew Him Rejects the Barnard Statue.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have read with relief of mind your editorial article in the issue of Oct. 3 of deserved censure of the Lincoln statue presented to London. It deserves condemnation, not only as false in artistic ideal, but as grotesque exaggeration of an imaginary personality in no wise resembling Lincoln, save as a caricature.

I perfectly remember Lincoln, in my early days in Washington, at the beginning of the civil war. (I am now 78 years old.) I lived there with my sister and brother-in-law, then Mayor of the city. It brought us much in contact with the official life of the time, with the President as the central figure. A tall, well-built man, head uplifted, and generally looking off, over, above, beyond the people about him. This was his habitual pose at the White House receptions. He rarely looked down at those who filed past to grasp his hand, save when accosted by a friend or acquaintance, who would arrest attention for a moment, bringing flashes of light and animation to his face. Then the melancholy and gravity, the far-away look, would again settle over the features—an overburdened, troubled look, but brave and undaunted. There was no suggestion ever of slouching, gangling, or letting go of himself. It would have been unnatural, impossible, out of all character in a man like Lincoln.

We knew well his private secretary, Nicolay, who came to Washington with him; also the younger secretary, Hay, a rosy-cheeked, good-looking, exceedingly self-conscious young man, at that time giving no indication of special intellectual quality save in pretty little verses.

Nicolay was then writing and well on in the "Life of Lincoln," of which he often spoke, and once brought some of the pages to read to us. His heart was full of the subject. He adored the President, with deep appreciation and admiration of his character and intellectual power, and often spoke of his tender thought and consideration for others, especially in the home life. It all profoundly impressed me, as well as much else in the personality of Lincoln that seems to have drifted away from the conception of the present generation. Had Nicolay lived long enough to complete his own "Life of Lincoln," I believe it would have been impossible for any such portrayal of him to have been offered to England. M. V. N. C.

TEACHING PATRIOTISM.

Mr. Stitt Thinks Good Work Is Being Done in the Lower Grades.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In a recent issue was printed a letter from Professor Abram S. Isaacs, in which he stated his opinion that capable and experienced teachers are necessary in the primary grades of our public schools, so as to enforce the glory of patriotism, and make it as natural for the foreign child to love his adopted country as to love his parents. All educators will agree with this statement. It proceeds, however, to declare that "Our educational authorities seem not to appreciate this fact, when the lower and most largely attended grades become the victims of well-meaning, but inexperienced, instructors."

The intimation of the letter is that we have many inexperienced teachers in the lower grades. The fact is that our Principals do not assign all the new teachers to any one grade, but they are scattered throughout the school. Even the new teachers, however, from the training schools and Hunter College, are thoroughly imbued with the patriotic spirit. The efficient Principals do much to awaken a proper love for the United States among all alien children. This is done by the following means:

(a) Frequent salutes to the flag, the repeating of the "Pledge of Allegiance." (b) Daily and weekly talks by teachers and Principals on patriotic topics. (c) Compulsory learning of patriotic memory gems. (d) In all grades the children are taught the words and music of such national songs as "America," "The Star-Spangled Banner," "Hail, Columbia," &c. (e) Through dictated sentences and monthly compositions, emphasis is placed on love of flag and country.

The following is an actual occurrence, which illustrates the kind of effective teaching our teachers are imparting. I was examining a class in one of the lower grades recently in reading. A little girl read the following sentence: "Lincoln was a patriotic American." When she had finished the paragraph, I said, "Little girl, please tell me what the book means by a 'patriotic American.'" The foreign child thought for a moment, and replied: "It means—it means—an American-American!" "Yes," I added, "not a German-American, an English-American, or any other kind, but an American-American."

I recently related the story to ex-President Roosevelt, who replied as follows: "Three cheers for that Italian girl! She gave the exact definition of a patriotic American when she said it means an American-American." He also added: "Indeed, I know well the admirable work that the Principals and

GARDEN OR MEADOW?

Mr. Van Ingen's Suggestion for Use of the Park Reservoir Ground.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A plan for the development of the ground now occupied by the lower reservoir in Central Park has been proposed by an architect of the greatest distinction, associated with a sculptor whose genius is in need of no praise. This plan you have warmly advocated from both the aesthetic and economic points of view. Another plan, however, suggests itself: Why not convert this area into a meadow?

Mr. Vaux said: "The principal defect of the ground originally appropriated for Central Park was that it offered very few comparatively level tracts of sufficient area to make a definite meadow-like impression on the eye." And, again, "A lack of pastoral meadow-like stretches of lawn in any large public park will always be felt by the habitual visitor to be a serious disadvantage." There being now opportunity to remedy this defect, why not do so? Can Mr. Hastings and Mr. MacMonnies hope to create anything more beautiful than an open meadow?

In addition to the artistic value of the meadow and its consistency with the plan of the park, the ease with which it can be developed is evident. The reservoir was not created by excavation, it was made by building a wall. The ground on which it was constructed was undulating and consisted of gneiss rock covered in places with earth; it was graded to the required level by cutting and filling. The lowest ground above the reservoir between the East and West drives is 80 feet above sea level; the bottom of the reservoir is 85 feet above sea level. What can be simpler than to remove the walls and regrade?

There is, too, an economic gain in doing this which may not at first be apparent. The inner slope of the reservoir walls, too steep for playground use, occupies some four or five acres; once the walls be razed there is a clear gain of this acreage, millions in value. Again, the available space at the bottom of the reservoir, the walls being left in place, is some twenty-six or twenty-seven acres, part of which must, of course, be reserved for the lagoon and fountain, whereas the acreage over all of the space included in the reservoir walls is thirty-five. It would undoubtedly be wise to add to this at least five acres from ground not now available as playground, but imediately adjoining the reservoir. We would then have a meadow or playground space of forty acres, as against twenty-six or twenty-seven.

Nor is there prohibitive expense in removing the reservoir walls. They are of earth, covered with stone laid without cement or mortar. The earth could, of course, be used for the necessary regrading.

Central Park is a unique work of art of the greatest value from the historic, esthetic or utilitarian point of view, and any development suggested can be intelligently considered only with reference to the fundamental idea of its plan.

To reconvert the reservoir space into an open meadow is entirely consistent with that plan. One cannot say the same of the proposition to convert the area into a formal sunken garden.

He Likes Camp Upton.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Various local Exemption Boards have received interesting letters from men who have been sent to Camp Upton which are indicative of the splendid patriotism and American spirit which are so manifest among the conscripted men. All of these letters would be of interest to the public, but we realize the publication of them all is impossible.

We inclose you one, however, which typifies the fighting spirit of the men of our new army. ALBERT S. BARD,

Local Board for Division, No. 154.

[Inclosure.]

Local Board 154, 60 West Thirteenth Street:

Received your letter. I am enjoying myself here just the same as if I was in New York. This place is better than what I have thought it would be, the way the boys were talking about it. I found it just as nice as any country place, only that we have to drill a few hours a day. But that doesn't hurt any of our American boys. When they return the people of New York will not know them. They will be fat, strong, and well-built men. Hope you can find a few more to send out here, so we will be able to get to France and give our friend, the Kaiser, a good beating, and show him that Uncle Sam doesn't have to be getting ready for forty years to win a small battle like his. So, closing with the honor of hoping to see France soon,

Sincerely yours,

Company A, 307th Infantry, Camp Upton, Yaphank, L. I.

P. S.—Mr. Palmer, the squadmaster, is not in my company, and I don't know where he is stationed. Hope I will be able to find him some day.

THE CALL OF THE PAST.

Seared on our consciousness, deep at the heart of us,
Scars of ancient wrongs, bequeathed from our martyred sires,
Old, old wounds that ache and throb in the hidden part of us,
Memories of dungeon, rack and devouring fires.

Lives again the Puritan and the dauntless soul of him,
Persecuted, done to death—how the old wounds stir!
Lives again the tortured Slav—they took savage toll of him,
And the beauteous Huguenot—death were best for her!

Bells that strike some awful doom—I am keenly 'ware of it,
When the chimes at midday ring, and whene'er I stand
Near a prison window barred—oh, the dreadful air of it,
And the heavy ball and chain dragging at my hand!

Whisperings of ancient woe do the sea winds bring to me,
Blood of exiled patriots leaping into life,
And a deep ancestral hurt the old ballads sing to me,
Of a gudeman lying stark and babes put to the knife.

Glorious, sacrificial lives, heirs are we to all of it,
And the age-old strife for truth summons as before,
Where they breasted unknown seas at the clarion call of it,
Comes to us the battle cry from the other shore.

By their heritage of pain, by their high deeds done for us,
Let the wrongs our forebears bore, struggling to be free,
Thrill our drowsing souls to life, by their victories woo for us,
[illegible] for us,

SWEDEN UNWILLING TO BE GERMAN ALLY.

She Uses the War to Free Herself From German Commercial Control and to Establish Independent Trade.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The question, Does Sweden really want to go into the war with Germany? is asked every day and at every hour of the day, and it is a great pity that there are only so few to give a proper answer to it. Most decidedly not! Sweden wants to remain neutral, and it will pay all sacrifices necessary to remain neutral and retain its honor.

In the following I am going to show why Sweden does not want to join Germany in this war, which is absolutely and clearly nothing but a commercial war on the part of Germany under the powerful guard of its militarism.

Long before the war Germany had tried commercially to conquer Scandinavia, and especially Sweden, whose producing capacity and consumption by far exceeded Denmark and Norway together. In all the negotiations regarding commercial treaties between Germany and Sweden, the former country has always tried to obtain such advantages that Sweden, in case she had agreed, would have had to be entirely dependent on Germany. Sweden has such valuable export articles, especially its iron ore, that they have enabled her to force Germany down from her grasping policy.

German commercial life, however, has always found a very good market in Sweden, because of the cheapness of the goods which were shipped from Germany to Sweden. It hardly needs to be explained how industrial Germany with its enormous home consumption could produce all kinds of goods at much cheaper prices than those at which they could be produced in Sweden. The raw materials, which mostly came from this continent or other transoceanic markets, reached Germany at a considerably lower rate of freight than at which they could reach Sweden. The labor market in Germany has always been cheaper than in Sweden, and thus one can understand, that even with an import duty in Sweden, the competition from "dumping" by Germany must have been very strong.

So the war came on. Sweden, first of all the neutral States, declared its neutrality and adopted forcible measures to defend it. Three-quarters of a million of armed and fully equipped soldiers stood during the first week of August, 1914, ready to act, in case any of Sweden's powerful neighbors on the other side of the Baltic should trespass upon Swedish territory. Sweden's little but very effective and highly trained navy was ready all along the coast to protect such places as could have been used for a possible landing of troops. The coast guard service had within twenty-four hours mined the entire coast from Haparanda down to Ystad and thence round the west coast up to the Norwegian frontier. Not a single ship, either Swedish or alien, could come within three miles distance from any part of the long shore of Sweden without being shot at. Sweden stood armed to the teeth, ready to fight for and maintain neutrality, and there was not a single man in the army or navy at that time who did not burn from desire to bleed for his country; but, fortunately for Sweden, such necessity did not arise.

Germany, falsely believing that Sweden stood more on her side than on the side of the Allies, repeatedly tried to violate the neutrality of Swedish waters, but every time she was repulsed. Many a time, when German heavy cruisers or destroyers held up English or other ships in Swedish waters, the little Swedish patrol destroyers—dwarfs comparatively with the big German ships—have enforced the neutrality of their country. These cases have not often been reported on this side of the ocean, as Swedish newspapers did not boast of deeds which they considered to be the performance of simple duty, but now, when everywhere the neutrality of Sweden is put up for discussion, it is just as well to recall these facts. There have been times when the young Lieutenant in charge of a Swedish destroyer has made clear for action and aimed his little deck gun on the big German warships in order to enforce respect for Sweden's water rights; and at all times big and proud Germany has had to retire and leave her prey in the guarding hands of Sweden's neutrality.

This is how Sweden has acted there, where cannon and gun speak their deadly clear language. This is how Sweden has shown, with the risk of opening hostilities against Germany, that she did not want to go into the war as an ally of Germany. And, further, on the commercial side of the question, Sweden has shown that she wanted to use her time to make herself independent of German influence. She has started many, many new industries in goods which were formerly imported from Germany. She has opened up a direct trade with transoceanic markets in order to accustom these countries to the fact that Sweden is a big market in itself and does not need the protection of Hamburg or Bremen or any other German seaport. Thank God, the days of the Hansa are past. Germany has made tremendous efforts during the war to influence Swedish manufacturers and Swedish merchants to import part of German machinery, assemble it in Sweden, and ship it as Swedish manufacture to foreign countries. Germany has bid generously for such services, but Sweden has resisted the temptation. Sweden has grasped the situation in its right light, now or never, and so German manufactures, German patterns, German well-known types have had to stand back for the duration of the war, and, in the meantime, Sweden has tried to cut Germany out of the big transatlantic markets. Sweden has worked up its industrial capacity to a considerable speed and value. Swedish goods have always stood for quality, and so they do still. And when the war is over Sweden hopes to find that her new markets will appreciate Swedish endeavors during war time, and that peace time will bring a continuation of trade—a continuation which will be able to compete with Germany, because the war-time prices have fully paid the high starting costs which every industry has found it so difficult to overcome.

These are some of the conditions of Sweden's position in this war. These are some of the reasons why Sweden does not want to go into the war with Germany; and throughout Sweden no responsible man wants to involve his country in a war only to "help Germany." Such motives do not exist. Sweden and the Swedes stand for neutrality. The old warfaring blood of the vikings has been boiling at a high temperature all during this war. The Swedes do not like to stand watching when fight is all around. But they are too civilized to go into the war only for war's sake. As long as Sweden's neutrality is respected, Sweden will keep out of war, and this country will surely respect such an attitude.

A SWEDISH SUBJECT.

AMONG ITALIAN PEASANTS.

A Spirit of Cheerful Determination to See the War Through.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have just returned from eight months in Italy, spent chiefly among the peasants of the north; returned to a land still flowing with milk and honey, to say nothing of wheat and fuel.

It is hard for us here to realize the conditions which exist in Italy today and the supreme effort that is being made there, an effort shared by the humblest peasant living in the remotest valley. Upon all the grievous burden of war has fallen, and to each has come a spirit of cheerful sacrifice and the dogged determination to "see it through."

I have had occasion to make frequent trips on the little railroad running along the shore of the lake of Como and reaching Sondrio, a small town not far from the frontier. By traveling third class—as we all do in these days—one sees many a tragedy of simple homes. Last Spring three peasant women boarded the train at a way station. Each face bore a look of dumb resignation, an acceptance of fate. After a while I learned their story. They were three mothers going to Sondrio to identify the bodies of their sons. The three young fellows, belonging to an Alpini regiment, had been caught and killed by an avalanche the day before.

Another time I found myself seated beside two peasants, mother and father. Between them sat their son in his soiled uniform, direct from the front. He wore a broad bandage over his eyes. He talked away at a great rate making plans for the future, impatient to be well and able to discard his bandage. He wanted to see again—the darkness bothered him—he said he felt as if he were going through a long tunnel. His parents held his hands and said nothing. Presently when the boy had dropped off to sleep the father turned to me and whispered:

"We haven't dared to tell him yet. Otillo has lost both his eyes. He will never see again."

Of course the hardships and privations are shared by all classes. Last Winter, the severest known in twenty years, coal was 300 lire a ton and hard to get at that price. Today there is no coal and wood is selling for 150 lire a ton and rapidly growing dearer. There are no men left to cut down the trees.

Every household saves all the odd bits of paper. These are soaked in water and kneaded into balls, then put in the sun to dry. They will serve to give a little heat later on. Walk down a fashionable street in Milan and you will see pyramids of these paper balls on the balconies of the houses of the rich. The war bread is of necessity very bad, and there is a general demand for charcoal tablets after each meal. We are five in our family, and our allowance of sugar last Winter was two pounds a month. Honey, however, was plentiful and made a good substitute.

We witnessed several small riots by pacifists and Specialists, many of them men who had been excused from military service on account of physical disability. These the police rounded up and sent to be reexamined. Curiously method of determining where free speech ceases and treason begins.

It may be debatable whether Italy's plan of campaign is the best. There is a strong presumption that it is. In any case, she has shown a heroism and self-sacrifice second to none, and what she needs should be given her. Foodstuffs, especially wheat—if not, no matter, so long as Cadorna gets his coal and metal.

For these she ought not to have to ask twice. She will not get them from England and France, therefore she must get them from us. H. B.

Ridgefield, Conn., Sept. 24, 1917.

La Follette and Breckinridge.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Apropos your recent editorial, in which you draw comparisons between the present course of La Follette and the actions of John C. Breckinridge in the early part of the civil war, I am sure a majority of Americans today, both North and South, would consider Breckinridge as greatly suffering by the comparison. The latter at least represented a very considerable part of the wealth and influence, so recognized at the time, and the undiscovered will of an absolutely overwhelming majority of the population, if the subsequent course of Kentucky politics is to be taken as a guide. After the war he was held up to the youth of his State as an example to follow, and even no less a Union man than General U. S. Grant thought well of him and believed that he would have greatly helped Kentucky had she made him Governor after the war. (J. R. Young, "Around the World with General Grant," Vol. II., Pages 461, 462.) This suggests, also, a rather frequent practice of comparing the position of the Southern Confederacy with Germany today, without making reservations. Apart from moral turpitude, (for there should be no question there,) the military situation was also different. The South was fighting a defensive war, whereas Germany was and still is fighting for world conquest.

Service Flag Out Early.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of this morning I notice reference to a service flag displayed on Cedar Street, and the statement is made that this is the first flag of the kind to appear in the business district. In the interest of accuracy I would state that the Methodist Book Concern displayed a service flag containing fourteen stars on Aug. 28.

Prices at Camp Upton.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The letter in The Times of Sept. 25 from "L. G.," Fort Ethan Allen, is most unfair to this section of Long Island. The price therein stated of $1.000 for a cottage for six months was exceptional. Very good houses, well furnished, and provided with furnace and electric lights, are renting in Patchogue, Bellport, and Brookhaven for $80 to $100 a month, and no attempt is being made to exploit the families of the men at Camp Upton.

General Smuts and British Rule.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have just read the extract from the speech of General Smuts before the Presidents of the Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom in London. What an eloquent testimony to the ruling of Great Britain over her colonies! It does me good, as an Englishman, to read it. Eighteen years ago General Smuts was our enemy. Today he is heart and soul a Britisher. What becomes of his argument against Germany's [illegible]

NIGHT IN LONDON DURING AIR RAID

People Cool in Exciting and Dangerous Circumstances—Walls Scarred by Shrapnel.

MARNE DAY REFLECTIONS

Inadequate Meaning Conveyed by the Word "Missing" in the Casualty Lists from the Front.

By CHARLES H. GRASTY.

Copyright, 1917, by The New York Times Company.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Sept. 6.—Although I had been in London when the Zeppelins were calling in the outskirts, I had never before been in the very midst of an air raid, and the experience of Wednesday night was a novel one. The strangest thing about it was how we should all be so cool in such exciting and dangerous circumstances.

The first notice was the passing of the Fire Department in the street below. Of course we got out of bed for that. A policeman on a bicycle immediately followed wearing on his body a "take cover" sign and sounding his bicycle bell. Within a few minutes we heard four explosions which might have been right around the corner. Bombs were falling a distance of nearly four miles and exploding as they struck the earth. My flat is on the fifth floor of a six-story building and has a big bay window that commands a fine view. I stood there for a few minutes watching the searchlights and trying to make out the Gothas, the droning of which was distinctly audible, and otherwise see something of the show, but was finally obliged to yield to feminine insistence and repaired to an inside hall on the third floor, where the occupants of the building had taken refuge.

This hall had no windows, and as the building is of concrete was perfectly safe, but I might as well have been in America for seeing or hearing the air raid. We stayed there for three-quarters of an hour, and then went back to the flat and watched the searchlights from the bay window for a few minutes. The "all clear" policemen hadn't come along, but it looked as if the raid was over. Traffic in the street below seemed normal, and the only evidence that something unusual had happened was the presence of groups of people, including a party of children, staring up into the heavens. There was a brilliant moon, but light, low-lying clouds. Some one in my party remarked of the shafts of artificial light that they "sinned against the moon."

I decided to go to bed, but before I went to sleep there were further explosions. I stayed in my flat this time. I telephoned several newspaper offices to find out what was going on. From one came the answer: "Something is going on, and we rather think it is serious, but we have no reports yet." I wish I were permitted to specify localities; it would make the answer from that newspaper office very interesting.

The second visit of the Germans was brief, and I went to bed and to sleep without knowing the nearness and extent of the danger. The next morning when I visited some of the places where the forty bombs had exploded I realized that I had been immediately in the path of the German planes, and that a bomb exploding at my corner would probably have killed everybody who happened to be standing at a window in the vicinity. The explosion carries with it a shower of shrapnel, which smashes window panes, and the broken bits of glass are as fatal as the shrapnel itself. The bomb that fell at the hospital entrance broke every window pane in the block, and there were literally hundreds of shrapnel scars on the stone and brick walls—pits ranging from an inch to six inches in depth and diameter.

Marne Battle Day.

London, Sept. 6.

By general consent the 6th of September is regarded as the anniversary of the battle of the Marne. In the average club there is a certain amount of discussion today of that ever memorable engagement. So great was the romance of it and so incalculable the consequences that the interest in the Marne is as fresh today, almost, as it was three years ago. The Marne saved civilization; that is the way we put it on our side. And on both sides it will be admitted that it changed the whole course of history. The battle of the Marne defeated Germany. Whether the war shall last months or years, Germany must be defeated. We can say that now with our teeth set, but if the Germans had not been stopped at the Marne—well, we would have been like the little children who "should be seen and not heard," and the Kaiser would have been speaking for us by now, very probably.

The discussion of the Marne in its details still rages furiously, but on the main points there is agreement. It was on Sept. 3 that von Kluck, finding himself out of touch with the German armies on his left, swerved to the southeast, hoping to take the French in flank. The Sixth French Army, organized by Gallieni and led by Manoury, came from the west, and at the Ourcq, on Sept. 5, surprised von Kluck, taking him in flank. The next morning Joffre set his entire line in motion. General Foch hurled the French centre full at the demoralized Germans, and the battle of the Marne was won. The British made a substantial contribution to the victory, but it was later at the first Ypres that they performed their greatest service—the saving of the Channel ports.

In the discussions today I have heard many points interestingly made by officers who were in touch with the battle. An American military observer said that von Kluck would have won if he had gone to the west instead of to the east of Paris. Why did he go to the east? It was the plan of the German General Staff, not to be lightly changed.

Was von Kluck a good General? Yes, if he had happened to be on the eastern front he might have been the Hindenburg. If the other German armies had kept up with von Kluck the Marne could never have happened. His march from Mons to Melun was the greatest in military annals.

The French never expected the Germans to come through Belgium, and had to reform their lines. They thought that they would attack at Nancy and Verdun. The French were also surprised at the use of big guns as field artillery by the Germans. When the French wounded were brought in from those first engagements it was difficult to realize the extent of the slaughter. And the American observer added that the deadly effect of the machine guns, in which the Germans enjoyed practically a monopoly, was something fearful.

French Taking to Ice Water.

The war has changed many things, and one trifling but striking change is the cultivation of the taste, especially among French soldiers, for ice water. In a dining car recently I was the only man, as far as I could check, who refused the cracked ice passed by the waiters. French officers at my table replenished their glasses over and over again, and the refrigeration was manifestly grateful to them. Only a few years ago an American's demand for ice in a restaurant would have drawn unpleasant notice upon him.

The war may be followed by a reaction toward the spiritual, but at present the primal physical "urge" is strongly in evidence. The Frenchman has always taken the wants of the stomach very seriously; in war times the enjoyment of eating is much increased. It was impossible not to share somewhat in the great zest shown by my soldier tablemates in the restaurant car. While the waitress helped them their eyes never left the food between platter and plate, and when they had finished there was no job left for the dish washer. "There ain't going to be no leavin's" was the motto; and it was a joy to see pleasure of men who are carrying the real burden of the world.

The word "missing" in the casualty lists conveys a misleading, or, to put it at the fairest, an inadequate meaning. Often the greatest heroes of the battlefield go to their fate among the "missing." A man is sent with his comrades on a dangerous errand; he goes further than the rest, falls in enemy territory, and his body is buried by them. The only report on him is that he is among the "missing." Those reading his name think of him as possibly a prisoner. His dear ones suffer an anguished state of mind prolonged indefinitely and minus death under glorious circumstances the consolation that his ascertained would bring to them. Finally there appears the cruelly indefinite announcement "previously reported missing." To the man who thus modestly gives himself belongs the very highest honor, because his sacrifice is absolute and complete.

German Pressure on Swiss.

Switzerland has been getting her coal supply from Germany. There is no other place to obtain it. She has neither coal mines nor sea outlet. And no other adjoining country can spare coal.

Germany gets back many things from Switzerland. The war conditions have had a disastrous effect on the exchange in which Germany pays her balances. She has now conceived a plan to bring the German mark nearer to a parity with the Swiss franc. In a word, it is to couple with the selling of coal to Switzerland the condition that Switzerland shall lend Germany a sum estimated at some million dollars a month for a term of nine months. Conferences are now going on in Berne to secure this financial easing for Germany.

For Switzerland to agree would be a violation of neutrality, and would undoubtedly create a bad impression among the Allies. It is believed that there should be a strong protest from the American press and Government. If Switzerland's coal needs could be supplied from allied sources it is thought in Switzerland that virtual closing of the German-Swiss frontier would become possible, thus tightening the economic pressure on Germany.

SEIZED SHIPS NOW TRADERS

Seven German Vessels Relieve Lack of Tonnage in Philippines.

MANILA, Aug. 31, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—Seven German vessels seized in the Philippines at the outbreak of the war have been detailed to inter-island service by the United States Government.

These vessels are to be used in relieving the shipping scarcity in the islands. With increased prosperity due to war demands for Philippine products and the withdrawal of several inter-island vessels for more profitable foreign runs, the shipping situation in the Philippines in the last two years has gradually grown critical. The use of the German steamers will make possible the movement of thousands of tons of products now tied up.

Freight rates are very high. The better grades of sugar, tobacco, cigars, hemp, copra, and embroidery, which are commanding high prices in the United States, can pay these rates, but other products suffer.

In Iloilo there is still stored 80,000 tons of low grade sugar, worth perhaps 3 cents a pound on the American market. It will not be accepted as freight for less than that figure. Unless the Government intervenes an economic catastrophe is feared in the Southern sugar districts.

IN THE CURRENT WEEK.

WAR SERVICE ZEAL RULES AT HARVARD

Hundreds in Training Besides 4,750 Listed as Doing Duty for the Government.

MILITARY STUDIES OFFERED

Elementary and Advanced Instruction in Science and Tactics—Athletics Are Forsaken.

The war has captured Harvard, and the terms of surrender have been unconditional, according to the Harvard Alumni Bulletin, which tells how completely the cause of the nation has taken numbers of alumni and students, how the football schedules and all sports have been overturned, and how even under the shadow of preparing for the inevitable examinations the Harvard student takes time to prepare for the service of the nation.

There are two courses in military instruction under the direction of Colonel Azan, a French officer, intended to graduate men for commissions in the army. One is a primary course, and the second takes up advanced subjects in military tactics and warfare.

According to an incomplete list compiled by the Bulletin, about 4,750 Harvard men were in the service of the Government in August, 1917. It is explained that the statistics are incomplete, and that the number of men actually engaged in the military service of the country is many thousands more. The men are scattered in different services as follows:

|---|---|
| United States Army | 1,696 |
| Harvard R. O. T. C. and other military bodies | 847 |
| Foreign armies | 113 |
| United States Navy | 670 |
| Medical service | 520 |
| Red Cross and other relief work | 193 |

In addition there are 1,885 men training in the Harvard Reserve Officers' Training Corps, not included in the comparatively small number recorded in this table, while several hundred men from other colleges and from the Plattsburg training camp have used the Harvard facilities to prepare themselves for commissions.

Military Training Program.

This outline of the work in military instruction is given by The Bulletin:

"Military instruction will be continued at Harvard College during the coming year, but it will not absorb the whole time of the undergraduates. The tentative program laid out calls for the maintenance of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps under General Order 49 of the War Department. Two courses of instruction, one elementary and the other advanced, will be given, but for drill and other practical work the members of both courses will probably be united in one regiment.

"The elementary course in military science will consist of three hours a week in the class room and two or more hours a week in practical work; it will last throughout the year and will count for a half course; the subjects covered in the class room will be: Infantry drill regulations, field service regulations, small arms firing, the armaments, formations, and tactics of the present war, first aid to the wounded, hygiene, camp sanitation, and military organization.

"The advanced military course also will consist of three hours a week in the classroom and two or three hours a week of drill and other practical work. The subjects to be covered are: Map reading and military topography, reading of French maps, sand table work, intrenchments, company administration, military history, military history of the present war, minor tactics, field orders and minor manoeuvres, railroad transportation, and war games. Certain other courses will be optional.

"In addition, for those members of the university who enlisted in the Naval Reserve, but have received furloughs so that they might return to college during their minority, courses in naval science, which will prepare for the examinations for ensigns, will be given.

"The radio school maintained at Harvard by the Navy Department will continue during the college year. About 1,500 men are now attending the school."

Interest in Athletics Lags.

In commenting upon the overshadowing of Harvard by the war, the editor of The Bulletin urges the students not to permit the normal activities to be eclipsed completely. He says that "the students who have entered or returned to college to carry forward their intellectual training are still students, or potential scholars, and not merely soldiers and sailors in the making." The Bulletin editor quotes Dr. Payson Smith, the Commissioner of Education in Massachusetts, as urging all those too young for the rigors of war to study, so that "democracy may be made safe for the world." He continues that "making democracy a safe instrument in the hands of our future citizenship must be achieved through the education of our youth."

But it is pointed out that the youngsters at Harvard have not taken kindly to the attitude of "letting George do it." Upon the abandonment of intercollegiate sports schedules The Bulletin has this to say:

"Princeton, Yale, and Harvard have been subjected to some criticism because they, unlike most of the American colleges, have practically given up intercollegiate athletics for the duration of the war. The Bulletin cannot speak for Yale and Princeton, but, so far as Harvard is concerned, the usual athletic schedules have been dropped because Harvard undergraduates show little interest in football, baseball, rowing, and the other forms of sport. Efforts were made last Spring to develop scrub nines and crews, with the hope that contests might be arranged with some of the nearby colleges, but the Harvard students were so much absorbed in military training and other activities connected with the war that they had no desire to take part in athletics."

The Bulletin also publishes a list of casualties among its men in the service and gives a review of the circumstances of their deaths, as taken from the official dispatches.

A NEW PLEURISY TREATMENT

Carrel Tubes Introduced and Inflamed Surfaces Sterilized.

The Paris correspondent of The Medical Record sends this brief account of a new method of treating pleurisy:

"Professor Tuffier, at a recent meeting of the Academy of Medicine, reported a series of cases of purulent pleurisy and extravasations of blood into the pleura which had become purulent. After having exposed the technique of his procedure, which consists in evacuating the pleural cavity, introducing the Carrel irrigating tubes and sterilizing the inflamed surfaces until all infection is shown to be absent by the microscope, then closing the pleural opening to heal. Dr. Tuffier gives the result in twelve cases thus treated, ten of which were purulent. All were cured, but the remarkable feature of the cure was that the lungs recovered all of their functional activity, which infrequently follows the other forms of treatment."

105 OFFICERS ACCEPT A REDUCTION IN RANK

Reserve Men Will Be Second Lieutenants Rather Than Quit the Service.

PATRIOTISM BEFORE PRIDE

Voluntary Acceptance of Changes Wins Praise—No Reflection on Character.

Army orders made public in the last three days include the names of 105 officers of the Reserve Corps who have voluntarily consented to their reduction from the higher grades to Second Lieutenants. These officers held commissions as Colonels, Lieutenant Colonels, Majors, Captains, and First Lieutenants in the infantry, cavalry, field artillery, and engineering arms of the service. As Second Lieutenants they are assigned to duty as infantrymen and quartermasters.

In addition to these officers, who, after having exercised the higher commands, are willing to continue in the service of the country in the lowest of the commissioned ranks, a number of reserve officers have received honorable discharges and been restored to civil life.

"The War Department points out that the reduction in rank is in no wise to be taken as a reflection upon the character and standing of the men involved. The fact that they have accepted the lower commissions rather than retire to civil life with an honorable discharge is to be taken, The Army and Navy Journal states, "as an evidence of the high character of Reserve Corps officers and of the patriotic spirit in which they entered the service of the United States."

The list of officers whom the President will recommission as Second Lieutenants follows:

Startzman, Charles F., Col., Inft.

JAPANESE ANSWER CRITICS.

War Millionaires Announce Many Public Benefactions.

TOKIO, Sept. 5, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—Japanese "narikin," or war millionaires, who have been the targets for considerable criticism from their fellow-countrymen, have retorted to their critics by announcing important public benefactions.

A modern Kobe millionaire will establish a nautical school at a cost of $500,000, and the wife of another man, to whom has come great wealth from shipbuilding, will establish a high school for girls at Sumiyoshi, in Southern Japan. Another shipbuilding millionaire will found a commercial school in another town, and an Osaka manufacturer will start a girls' high school in his home city. There are many other projects of a similar nature.

Public criticism has been directed to the "narikin" on the ground of luxurious living, calculated to give a bad example, and their extravagant buying of curios and works of art. To this the war millionaires of Osaka and Kobe answer by announcing plans to found an academy of fine arts in Osaka, known as the Manchester of Japan.

WAR STATUS OF GREECE.

Question Whether She Is a Belligerent Under International Law.

ATHENS, Sept. 10, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—The Greek Government holds that Greece is at war, but some of the foreign Governments, including the United States, are not yet clear on the status of Greece as a belligerent. Officially the Greek authorities are proceeding on a war basis; the army is doing its share of fighting on the Saloniki front; the navy is chasing Austro-German submarines; all diplomatic relations with Berlin and the other allied capitals have been broken and the Ministers recalled. This establishes a de facto condition of war, but whether it is war in the sense defined by international law is still open to question.

The difference is not only a technical one, but it is of much importance whether a country is, or is not, at war. Foreign Governments are obliged to shape their relations to it, as at war, or not at war. Its soldiers and sailors, if taken prisoner by the enemy, are in much different relation if the country is at war than if it is not at war.

According to the Greek Governmental view, the existing Greek régime is at war, because it is the régime which Venizelos brought from Saloniki. As Venizelos had formally declared war at Saloniki, this state of war continues now that he has transferred his régime to Athens. The stumbling-block, however, is that the Greek Constitution says the King is the only one who shall declare war. To meet this requirement, King Alexander made a reference to the war in his speech from the throne, but the issue still remains as to whether this was a declaration of war, or of a state of war, with all that formality which places Greece among the belligerent nations.

Meantime Greece has brushed aside the technical question by carrying on de facto warfare the same as any of the other fighting nations, and most of the allied Governments have recognized her as a belligerent. A law just submitted to the Chamber by the Minister of War formally makes Aug. 16, 1916, as the date when Greece began hostilities against the Central Powers, which extends the war period to the days of King Constantine.

CITY COLLEGE MEN IN WAR.

Many Members of Faculty and Students Are in the Service.

The office of Dean Carleton L. Brownson reported on Saturday a total registration of 1,975 students in the day session of the College of the City of New York, for the present Fall term, as against 2,016 last term. This does not include the students in the evening session which opens next week and which last year exceeded the day college, and the Extension Courses for Teachers which accommodates about 3,000 persons. The entering class this year, numbering 596, is the largest in the history of the college. The war has made great inroads in the student body and in the Faculty.

The death of Professor Charles H. Parmly, head of the department of engineering, has caused an important vacancy in the Faculty. Dean Carleton L. Brownson has become Professor of Classical Languages and Literature, and will be the head of the now combined departments of Greek and Latin. Professor Frederick B. Robinson, director of the Division of Vocational Subjects and Civic Administration and the evening session, was promoted to be full Professor of Public Speaking.

It was also announced that Professor Walter E. Clark, Professor of Political Science and a well-known economist, has accepted the appointment of President of the University of Nevada and State Commissioner of Education, to take office on Jan. 1 next.

The courses in practical military science, started under the direction of Captain H. M. Holton at the City College last term, have been withdrawn for the present on account of the Slater military training law, which affects many of the boys at the institution.

The course in the Philosophy of International Relations offered by Senator Henri La Fontaine of Belgium at the college is to be given on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday afternoons at 4:15, instead of 3:45 as originally announced. This will make it possible for teachers, who are specially welcomed to take this course, to reach the college on time. The course is free to all mature interested persons.

DOUBTS URIC ACID AS CAUSE OF GOUT

An Old Concept Is Tottering on Its Throne, Says New York Medical Journal.

ENGLISH DOCTOR'S ATTACK

Blind Acceptance of Theory Has Hindered the Development of Proper Treatment.

Generations of physicians have held firmly to the belief that gout was caused by an excess of uric acid. The New York Medical Journal declares that this is "one of these old concepts which is tottering upon its throne." If the old theory is wrong, gout, apparently, must be relegated temporarily, at least, to the domain of medical mysteries. Under the caption, "An Attack Upon the Supremacy of Uric Acid in Gout," the writer says:

"Democracy is advancing in medical theory, as well as in political history. An increasing recognition of the interchange and shifting of energy from one part of the community of the bodily organism to the other interprets these manifestations of energy, their products, and results likewise in diverse manner. There is room in such a conception for the relation of the character of these to their various functions, of a substance performing one service under one condition or perhaps proving detrimental under another. There is latitude for admitting many factors at work in any disease picture, none of them static or fixed or ultimately to be considered the sole cause of disturbance.

"Uric acid as the last word in the causation of gout is one of these old concepts which is tottering upon its throne. The facts upon which its supremacy was established were too hastily assumed. Such is the position of Dr. Berkart, (J. B. Berkart: The Alleged Perils of Uric Acid. British Medical Journal, Aug. 18, 1917,) who brings forward certain other facts which at least raise a question of the validity of former conclusions. The ancient doctrine that gout was due to excess in food and drink needed some satisfactory basis on which to stand. Therefore when uric acid deposits were detected in the joints where inflammatory pain had been experienced, and since uric acid was supposed to be an imperfect form of urea, the apparent sequence was seized upon without further investigation.

The toxic nature of uric acid was assumed because it is a product of excretion, although on the other hand it is a regular product of normal metabolism and ordinarily produces no disturbance. It is derived not alone from food, but also from disintegration of the nuclei of tissue. It only becomes morbific when elimination by the kidneys is interfered with, but as then other effete substances are also retained, it is too much to assert that uric acid alone is responsible for resultant disturbance. It has been alleged that a too acid condition of the blood prevented its solubility and it must then be removed by deposit into the joints. There is, however, no evidence for this.

"Then again, uric acid is found upon inflamed or obsolete tissues belonging to a variety of disorders, none of which has been attributed to this product, while in gout, which has appropriated to itself this causative product, it is not always found to exist. Moreover, uratic crystals never occur in the circulating fluid, their deposition is an ante-mortem phenomenon. * * * Thus the clinical data afford no proof whatever of any pathogenic property of uric acid, nor do the results of experimental inquiries.

"The place of uric acid, therefore, in the causation of gout is a disputed one. The acceptance of it so firmly without sufficient proof has not only blinded medical men, but has proved a source of confidence to the public in various remedies exploited to combat this substance and has thus prevented or delayed the seeking of proper effective means for treating the disease. The use of uric acid solvents is in certain cases favorable to the deposit of uratic crystals, and moreover the removal of uric acid from the blood by radium treatment did not prevent the return of attacks of gout nor mitigate their frequency or severity."

La Follette's Defense.

"La Follette's defense," said Poultney Masters, the brilliant Pittsburgh jurist, "seems to me as confused as the swan song of the burgess who was deposed from office for chicken stealing.

"'I'm up a tree,' the burgess declared, 'but my back is to the wall, and I'll die in the last ditch, going down with flags flying, and from the mountaintops of democracy, hurling defiance at the foe on the wings of triumph, regardless of the party lash that barks at my heels.'"—Tombigbee Clarion.

Flexible in Traffic

Driving in traffic demands, both for comfort and for safety, a flexible motor. And no motor that is choked with carbon can be flexible. If you want your car to jump when you touch the accelerator; to pull on the hills; and to throttle down to a crawl on high, you must have your motor clean and free from carbon.

The Esta Water Auxiliator

will keep your motor clean. If it is already carbonized it will clean it. The polished cast aluminum tank is an ornament to any car and its window of plate glass lets you see it work every minute.

The Automobile Club of America officially tested the Esta Water Auxiliator and reported:

"With an Esta attached to a carbonized motor at the end of the decarbonizing run there was obtained in one hour's run an increase in speed of 35.7%; of power 35.6% and also a decrease in fuel consumption of 17.2%."

The Esta Water Auxiliator will give you decreased fuel consumption; increased speed; increased power; smoother operation; more perfect combustion; and no carbon.

It can be attached simply and quickly. The price is $15.00. At your dealer's or at

NEW PLAYS AND OLD ON THE RIALTO

SHAW VS. THE BURGLAR

By JOHN CORBIN.

THE significant, the revealing feature of "Misalliance" is Shaw's attitude toward the burglar. In our native and contemporary drama, when a low-browed, low-lived ruffian skulks in, his hand to his hip pocket, we have come to recognize the predestined hero. He is a victim of our vicious Social Order, a rebel against our ill-written and maladministered law. Black-visaged and murderous as he seems, we know in our hearts that fundamentally he is virtuous. In the end he will triumph and dine formally at 8 o'clock in the odor of sanctity and long, black cigars. Our native and contemporary drama revalues our moral values, as Nietzsche would say, and out of Antichrist fashions the Superman. Paradox reigns among us, and clever, diabolic laughter. As Shaw himself has remarked, it is the unfailing sign of a fresh creative genius that he has his own morality—newer, truer, and in every way better. Time was, indeed, when Shaw took himself rather seriously as the only original hero of crook drama, the only revaluer of moral values. He was forever throwing an attitude of holding his gun to our hearts and bidding us to surrender our dearest beliefs. What a change has been wrought by the brief and rapid years! To the erstwhile paradoxical Shaw, it now appears, the burglar is simply the burglar. His declaration that at heart he is a Puritan, which was once accepted as a masterpiece of delicious, Satanic irony, shows up now, in the light of the progress of our native drama, as a sober, churchly fact. His burglar is punished not only by his sins but for them. Having ensconced himself in a Turkish bath (deposited for this purpose in the drawing room by a treacherous dramatist) retribution leaps upon him. For minutes that must seem hours, days, weeks, a penitentiary life sentence, he is obliged to listen to this Shavian dialogue.

He has heard it all before, of course, taking it seriously, and laughing loud and long—paradoxical devil!—to show how very seriously he took it. No doubt it was because, as a youth, he abandoned himself to such deep, philosophic laughter that he is now the airy burglar. But it was all so much better done, so long ago. This patter about the enmity between parents and children seemed actually fresh in "You Never Can Tell." And has not his whole life as a burglar been molded by that immortal line from Shaw's blank verse dramatization of "Cashel Byron," so deft in its reproduction of the pre-Shakespearean cadence?

Two things I loathe, my duty and my mother!

Nowadays the burglar knows that this sort of sentiment was first done by Samuel Butler in "The Way of All Flesh." Moral though Cashel was, his was not really a new morality, Shaw's morality. And here it all is again, showered upon the burglar, rained upon the burglar, pelted down on his defenseless head, until he would swelter with impotent rage even without the aid of a Turkish bath. Johnny Tarleton talks like a mechanical replica of the blonde and British Johnny of almost any old Shaw play; Old Tarleton, the unshrinking Napoleon of unshrinkable underwear, like a savorless travesty of the Napoleonic cannon-maker in "Major Barbara," and Bentley Summerhays, who throws fits on the floor when people don't love him, like a savorless travesty of Marchbanks in "Candida."

All this, it appears, the burglar can stand, however painfully it enrages him, superheats him. But when Hypatia Tarleton bodily woos her wingless airman, chasing him up the hill with the intended result that he chases her down and compromises himself by catching her, the violence done to his memory of the heroine of "Man and Superman" is too much for any human burglar. He leaps from the torture chamber and denounces the play, with all the people in it.

A worse fate awaits him—the worst that can happen to any crook, the double cross. And it is given him by his author. When dramatis personae realize their power, they will form a union and extract their just deserts from unscrupulous, exploiting dramatists. No burglar will be allowed to work on the stage except in his proper capacity as an original paradoxologist, a social satirist diabolically clever. If Shaw had any trace of the intelligence that inspires the authors of our American drama, he would recognize the obvious fact that the burglar is the only hero. Instead he makes it appear that his burglar antagonist—the antagonist of odious, warmed-over Shavianism—is wholly devoted to a loathsome duty, and is even now in the act of defending the honor of his mother. Then he gets the defenseless fellow drunk on one glass of vegetarian cordial; and, finally, as the crowning proof of his reactionary Victorian belief in the morality of punishments, Shaw makes the burglar himself lapse into an endless patter of trite and threadbare Shavianism.

Yet an intelligent American audience, nurtured on our native drama, will doubtless detect the truth in this case of Shaw vs. the Burglar. With regard to this piece, the burglar is right. Before "Misalliance" Shaw wrote plays with a punch, or rather a [illegible] in them—"Candida," "Man and Superman," "Caesar and Cleopatra." These are truly plays that project a housebreaking view of his homebreaking characters. They have an atmosphere rich in color and not without a definite tinge of poetry. And Shaw has done so since "Mis-happy, more transcendent, than in "Androcles and the Lion," which followed hard upon it. But "Misalliance" is all that the burglar would have said, and could not. It is everywhere repetitious, and, except for the tragic irruption of the burglar, it is without action. Its production was no doubt inspired by the success of "Getting Married," and Mr. Faversham has expended the same skill and care on it. But undramatic as both plays are, even untheatrical, they have a vital, a fundamental, difference. "Getting Married" attacks a subject in which the human race is deeply involved, whether it will or no; and it attacks it with courage, frankness, and brilliancy. What "Misalliance" is about Shaw himself probably does not know.

The two marriages into which the cast talk themselves are the most fortunate kind of alliances. The two which they talk themselves out of, however, would have been amiss. Lord Summerhays, a pale afterglow of the wise and kindly Bishop in "Getting Married," is mildly in love with and proposes marriage to Hypatia, the dead ringer (or almost dead) for Ann in "Man and Superman." Old Tarleton is more fervently in love with Lena, the Polish acrobat, and what he proposes is less ceremonious. His Lordship is scouted and flouted and routed for what, to Hypatia, seems preposterous indelicacy. Tarleton, a frank sensualist, pleads his creed so eloquently that Lena, though she rejects his strictly circumscribed offer, accepts him as an honorable pal. Somewhat messy, these ancient amorists—and especially in view of the fact that the young women are already engaged, or becoming so, to the young men. Is it possible that Shaw was intending a comedy of what Howells has called a man's Indian Summer? Björnson actually wrote such a comedy, taking for his text a rather poetical proverb: When the young vine blooms, the old wine ripens. But the result was very dismal. The ripening of wine is a poetical figure; but the figure of a paterfamilias, whether long or short, lean or stout, as he proposes to an unsuspecting girl young enough to be his daughter, is neither poetical nor rightly comic. If, as Shaw's title suggests, his mind when he wrote the play was occupied with such mismated wooings, there is no wonder that the result seems warmed-over, tasteless, and curdled.

The Hellcat Heroine.

IT might have escaped due notice if it had not happened on Tuesday night to Florence Nash at the Forty-eighth Street, and then on Wednesday night to Lenore Ulrich at the Lyceum. These young ladies were both called "Hellcat!" by the villain whom they had foiled, and the audiences shouted with admiring laughter. Now it is happening nightly in a strident Broadway duet that haunts the ear of the reminiscent and ruminiscent playgoer. We have long had the fact but never before the name of the Hellcat Heroine.

In "The Land of the Free" Miss Nash is a Yiddische Mäd'l, and in "Tiger Rose" Miss Ulrich is Canadian French; but both are broken-English heroines, and both delight us by the quaint limitations in their vocabulary of proper nouns and the exuberance of their vocabulary of improper ones. Miss Nash's improprieties are mainly in the matter of vivid Bowery slang. How she acquired it all in so short a time can only be explained on the supposition that somewhere and somehow she managed to meet her author, Fannie Hurst. With regard to Miss Ulrich, there is a similar doubt, for the speech of the rough Western types with whom her youth has been surrounded is singularly free from the profanity in which she indulges. But she has a great advantage in the fact that her author, Willard Mack, is a member of her cast, being, in fact, the villain. It is he who hurls at her the name "Hellcat!" But it must be admitted that she vastly betters his instruction, and especially when she is talking to the Jesuit Priest.

The Hellcat Heroine is not all profanity and tigerish ferocity. Oh, no! Both ladies are extraordinarily snugglesome in their hours of ease and extraordinarily passionate in their conduct toward the hero. In defense of her lover Miss Ulrich foils the villain once and twice; and then, a third time, she shoots the gun from his hand, putting him down completely. Miss Nash is not violent; but in effect she is far more masterful. Her young man, a Fifth Avenue swell who does welfare work in the Bowery, has apparently not realized that he is her lover: yet she announces her engagement to him before the entire sweatshop. Thereupon, as it seemed, even he perspired. Her admirers in the audience thought that it was only a ruse to escape the contract labor law, which she had unwittingly violated. This end was, in fact, achieved; but the announcement was no ruse. The last act showed the young couple married. It showed, furthermore, the process by which Miss Nash wished her whole family upon her husband—her "ruined" sister, her peasant mother, and a one-armed veteran of the war. Really, there are dangers hitherto only half suspected in east side philanthropy.

Of the two plays, "Tiger Rose" is perhaps more enjoyable. It is loose in the main plan—straggling and slow to get busy and slow and straggling at the end. But the central scenes are tense and exciting melodrama; and the whole is surrounded, enveloped, with a perfect example of the illusive realism of which Mr. Belasco is masto be a celebration of the life which America offers to the able and aspiring immigrant. But midway in its three acts a change sweeps over it. One suspects the hand of Mr. Brady. Thenceforth it develops in the manner of familiar Third Avenue drama in which Nellie the Beautiful Cloak Model—or is it Annie the Finisher?—marries the heavy swell and goes to live with his family on Fifth Avenue. Even as such a play the third act is absurdly sketchy and preposterously unreal. The second act broaches situations potentially interesting—Sonya's strike against her sweatshop employer and the question of our contract labor laws—but they come to nothing. Both are abruptly abandoned in the wild rush of Miss Nash's matrimonial conquests. Let who will break the laws of the land of the free if she can hellcat its swells.

In the single act which afforded real dramatic material Miss Nash developed unexpected powers in characterization and in emotional acting. Miss Ulrich's opportunities, though of a more conventional sort, were spread more evenly over her play. "Tiger Rose" has the possibilities of a distinct popular success.

NOTES OF THE LONDON STAGE

THE season to date in London has naturally been far less productive than the early New York season, and the reason for that condition is not far to seek. The continuing air raids make theatregoing an unpopular business, for the instinct is to be out in the open when danger approaches from the skies. London theatre programs now carry notices, similar to our walk-do-not-run pronunciamentos, informing patrons that they will be warned from the stage at least twenty minutes before the Zepps can reach the theatre. In spite of this, however, audiences are naturally nervous and the theatre business suffers accordingly. A number of theatres, in fact, have discontinued evening performances and give matinées in their places.

In these circumstances it is not strange that theatre managers should eschew gambling and confine themselves for the most part to attractions tried and true. Accordingly, one finds two companies of "Damaged Goods" playing in different parts of the city, and elsewhere "The Three Daughters of M. Dupont" is being given. Another established favorite is "The Professor's Love Story," which has had a long run, and Sir John Hare, upon the occasion of his recent return to the stage, chose to revive Sydney Grundy's comedy, "A Pair of Spectacles." Dion Boucicault, to pursue the subject further, is reviving "Trelawney of the Wells" at the New Theatre.

Then, too, Henry Arthur Jones's "The Liars" was revived at the St. James a week ago. A little earlier in the season the St. James housed Mr. Jones's newest play, "The Pacifists," the career of which was short and dismal. Mr. Jones chose to write a farce around the subject of pacifism, but probably the failure of the play was attributable less to that circumstance than to the fact that he wrote a bad farce.

Jerome K. Jerome's farce, "Cook," was another early Fall production which fell by the wayside. Mr. Jerome, forgetting for the time being the man who wrote "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," returned to his earlier field and endeavored to turn out a piece which would be merely amusing, but the results were not satisfactory. "Cook," accordingly, closed last night at the Kingsway, which will presently have a new comedy entitled "One Hour of Life" as its attraction. Lillah McCarthy, incidentally, will have the leading rôle therein.

Another recent London production is "The Yellow Ticket," the melodrama which A. H. Woods gave to New York several seasons ago. Gladys Cooper is playing the rôle of the persecuted heroine, created here by Florence Reed, and Allan Aynesworth has John Mason's old part, that of the villainous police head.

One of the most interesting events of the London season will presently take place at Wyndham's, where the new Barrie play, "Dear Brutus," will be produced. Sir John Hare has been appearing at Wyndham's in his revival of "A Pair of Spectacles," but the strain of acting proved too great for him, and the engagement was brought to an end last night.

Gilbert Miller, who is the son of our own Henry Miller, has forsworn America and is making a London manager of himself. Young Miller has leased the Garrick, and on Wednesday of next week he will produce a new piece called "The Saving Grace," with Charles Hawtrey as its star.

"Chu Chin Chow," which will be revealed at the Manhattan Opera House in another week, continues to be one of the biggest successes in London. Ring Lardner, who reached these shores during the last week, brought at the same time expressed some doubt as to whether it would be staged here in the London fashion. His doubts, declared Mr. Lardner, were concerned with certain dark-skinned chorus girls who appeared in London in a state of vast deshabille, and who might or might not be permitted to disport themselves similarly on Manhattan's Thirty-fourth Street.

"Chu Chin Chow," however, is not the only old favorite which continues. At the Lyric Theatre "Romance" has completed its second solid year, and gives no indications of becoming less popular. Doris Keane, incidentally, is still in the cast. At the Criterion there is that perennial farce, "A Little Bit of Fluff," which failed so dismally here and has succeeded so sensationally in London. The Apollo has Earl Derr Biggers's war play, "Inside the Lines," which is already a considerably greater success in England than it was in New York. "Seven Days Leave," a war melodrama which is now bound for New York via Boston, is still on the boards at the Lyceum, and "Theodore & Co." continues to be popular at the Gaiety. The Haymarket still has "General Post," which Charles Dillingham was to have offered to New York audiences a month ago, but did not.

From a musical standpoint the most interesting piece to Americans is "Maid of the Mountains," in which our own Jose Collins has scored all sorts of successes at Daly's. Early in the new year, according to report, the piece will be seen here, and Miss Collins will come along. Mr. De Courville's "Smile" (possibly the progenitor of Mr. Dillingham's "Cheer Up") is continuing at the Garrick, and that old but deft Pinero farce, "The Magistrate," has been musicalized and is running at the Adelphi under the title of "The Boy."

American motion pictures are becoming increasingly popular in London, and exhibitors there are now depending on them almost exclusively. Griffith's "Intolerance" is still being given twice daily at the Princess, and in the movie advertisements in the London papers one sees mention of even a certain Mutt and Jeff, which is followed, however, by the explanation that they are "American humorous cartoons."

The London Daily Telegraph, in recording the arrival of Albert De Courville from America, sets down several interesting facts which have not been published hereabout. Among those whom Mr. De Courville has engaged for London, declares The Telegraph, are Sam Bernard, Bert Williams, and Lew Kelly. The last named, incidentally, is known only to the American burlesque public, but for all that he is distinctly humorous. His method is so quiet, furthermore, that it is only a matter of moments until he gets out of burlesque.

THE WEEK'S HAPPENINGS

THE process of attrition is slow in the theatres, but gradually the weaker sisters are being replaced. The coming week will witness the return of two well known comediennes, and there will be a drama, a musical comedy, and the return of one of last year's successes to round out the week.

THE RESCUING ANGEL—Tomorrow night at the Hudson.

The return of Billie Burke in a comedy by Clare Kummer—and under the joint management of Arthur Hopkins and Florenz Ziegfeld—is quite certain to be the ranking attraction of the week. "The Rescuing Angel," it is promised, is in the same vein as Miss Kummer's comedies of last season and deals with the attempt of a young woman to save her father from financial ruin. In Miss Burke's support will be Frederick Perry, Robert McWade, Claude Gillingwater, Marie Wainwright, Roland Young, Richard Barbee, and others.

THE CLAIM—Tuesday night at the Fulton.

Charles Kenyon, who wrote "Kindling," is co-author of this new piece and Frank Dare was his collaborator. The piece is a drama of the mining country, but assurances are given that the title also has reference to a human situation. Florence Roberts will be at the head of the cast, and her associates will include Edward H. Robins, Geraldine O'Brien, and Florine Arnold.

FURS AND FRILLS—Tuesday night at the Casino.

Something more than a year ago Edward Clark wrote a farce entitled "Coat Tales," and on Tuesday at the Casino the piece will be revealed as a fullfledged musical comedy. Silvio Hein has written the music, and the company includes Frances Demarest, Beatrice Allen, Ernest Torrence, (the tall Scot,) George Anderson, and Ruby Norton.

EVE'S DAUGHTER—Thursday night at the Playhouse.

There is good news for all in the announcement of the beginning of another repertoire season by Grace George at

George's season was one of the most interesting events of the season, but last year a paucity of plays, coupled with the success of "The Man Who Came Back," necessitated Miss George's absence. Her first play this season is a comedy by Alicia Ramsey, and her company will include Lionel Atwill, Howard Kyle, Rockliffe Fellowes, Florence Edney, Florence Wollerson, Norah Lamison, and Lynn Hammond.

It is a dull week when no new theatre opens, and Arthur Hopkins will supply the event this week by opening his new house, the Plymouth, on Wednesday night. The Plymouth is one of the four theatres which now stand en bloc between Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Streets, being the house immediately west of the Booth. Clare Kummer's comedy of last year, "A Successful Calamity," will have the honor of opening the new house. Mr. Gillette, of course, is still the star, and the company, as a whole, is practically the same as that which supported him last season.

The Castles will dance again once together tonight, the occasion being a British recruiting rally at the Hippodrome. Raymond Hitchcock will be master of ceremonies, and the entertainers will include the Kilties' Band of the Fifth Royal Highlanders, Mme. Alda, Reginald de Koven, David Bispham, Rock and White, the Dollys, John Charles Thomas, Adele Rowland, and Clifton Crawford.

Franz Schubert's "Dreimaederlhaus" ("The House of the Three Little Maids") will be offered by the German Company at the Irving Place Theatre on Wednesday night. This is the piece which tells of Schubert's own life, and the composer's own music has been used throughout.

Clare Kummer, absolutely unknown as a playwright a year ago, will have three pieces on or near Broadway by the middle of this week. Billie Burke, in "The Rescuing Angel," will open tomorrow night at the Hudson; William Gillette, in "A Successful Calamity," will christen the new Plymouth Theatre on Wednesday night, and "Good Gracious Annabelle," another of last season's pieces, will be seen this week at the

UP AND DOWN BROADWAY

THAT the readjustment of prices and values in practically every field would sooner or later have its counterpart in the theatre has been evident for a long time, and concrete evidence that the day is here is contained in the announcement that $3 a seat will be charged for at least one of New York's big musical productions this season, and probably for three or more. The show which will blaze the way will be the new Fred Stone piece, "Jack o' Lantern," coming to the Globe, and those which are expected to follow in its trail are the Century revue and the Fall Winter Garden production.

Theatre tickets, like other commodities, frequently go up in price, but they never have been known to come down. Three seasons ago, when "Chin-Chin" was in the midst of its success at the Globe, Charles Dillingham introduced an innovation by asking $2.50 a seat on Saturday nights instead of the customary $2. Immediately the plan was seized upon, and improved upon, by the other managers. Not only did they charge $2.50 on Saturday nights for their musical shows, but they charged it on other nights as well. That accomplished, they began to ask and get $2.50 for their non-musical attractions on Saturday nights, and undoubtedly the next step will be the complete abandonment of $2 as a price for an orchestra seat.

Nor is it in New York alone that the change is taking place. "The Follies," which can charge almost any price and get it, introduced the $2.50 on the road successfully last season and are naturally continuing it this year. Having found that one or more New York shows have been asking $3 in their absence "The Follies" are certain to try it themselves when they next come to the New Amsterdam. Then, finding it successful, as they doubtless will, the next step will be to introduce the custom on the road. And so the merry game continues.

The increase, of course, is due to the increased cost of theatrical productions, and the managers are well within their rights in asking a price which will net them a profit. It becomes interesting to note, however, that a pair of seats for the Fred Stone show will cost, inclusive of the war tax, $6.60. That is, they will cost $6.60 at the box office, and probably there will not be any at the box office. By the time the broker's fee and the tax thereon are added it will require practically all of a ten-dollar bill before one can pass the magical gates of a theatre.

Although no word comes from the Century Theatre as to the date of opening, it is the general understanding that it has been found necessary to set back the day again, and it now is unlikely if the première will take place before Oct. 27. A long time ago formal announcement was made that the house would open on Sept. 24, but the announcement was so patently an untruth that the management never even took the trouble to make known a postponement when the 24th came and passed. It is the prerogative of every big production to have at least three opening dates, and in many cases they are all decided upon at once.

Hartley Manners continues to be four or five plays ahead of himself in the interesting game of writing pieces for Laurette Taylor to act, and the passing months are only making matters worse. When Miss Taylor was appearing in "The Harp of Life" last season Mr. Manners was somewhere in the offing with three completed manuscripts. These were "Happiness," a comedy somewhat akin to "Peg"; "The Wooing of Eve," the central rôle in which is an Englishwoman, and "Barbaraza," which would give Miss Taylor the chance to be an uncivilized near-Easterner.

In the final weeks of "The Harp of Life," however, Mr. Manners dashed off "Out There" in seventeen days, and the three plays have waited. And over the Summer months, it turns out, Mr. Manners has written still another, and it will undoubtedly see production at the Liberty during Miss Taylor's current season.

The new piece, which is still to receive a title, will placate for a time Miss Taylor's demands for something different by giving her a chance to play an Italian. The part is not of organ grinder calibre, however, but the wife of an Italian Ambassador to an unnamed country—a woman of breeding and distinction. Miss Taylor, in "Peg," "The Harp of Life," and "Out There," has been successivly Irish, American, and Cockney, and she refuses stalwartly to double on her tracks. Being ambitious to play almost everything on the dramatic calendar, she is already looking forward eagerly to the Italian rôle. It seems probable that "The Wooing of Eve" will be the program after "Out There" has run its course, and that it will be followed in turn by the Italian play.

As for "Happiness," present indications are that Miss Manners never will play it, despite—or perhaps because of—the fact that it would almost certainly be a huge success. The part is again one of those wistful, appealing, and oppressed heroines—like Peg, in other words—and the bugaboo of Laurette Taylor's life is the fear that she will have another play so successful that she will have to play in it three or four seasons.

Mrs. Fiske's play, as yet unnamed, has gone into rehearsal and will open in Baltimore on Oct. 29. Meanwhile, considerable difficulty is being experienced in finding the right actors. Ferdinand Gottschalk has been engaged to play Heinrich Heine, but no one has been found who can typify Chopin or Liszt, and it may be necessary to call Irving Berlin.

The part which "Backfire" filled in the dramatic history of last season was played this year by "Branded," the melodrama which wound up a tempestuous fortnight at the Fulton last night. Once a year seemingly there comes a playwright with sufficient faith in his work—and sufficient money—to produce it himself and offer it upon Broadway. Last year's venturesome playwright was a Baltimore newspaper proprietor, Stuart Olivier, writing under the name of Stuart Fox. Mr. Olivier first rented the Thirty-ninth Street Theatre, and later paid a huge sum for five or six weeks at the Lyceum. The piece was melodrama of the type which A. H. Woods presented in the old days, and it was a rare week when the gross receipts equaled the salary list.

"Branded" was another piece of the tween it and "Backfire" being, apparently, in the amount of money which its backers were willing to spend to keep it on the boards. The playwright in this case was Oliver D. Bailey, who may be remembered as one of the authors of a melodrama called "Pay Day," which flourished last season at the Cort and the Booth. "Pay Day" was a piece of the same sort, but was saved from such classification by a prologue and an epilogue, which poked fun at the melodrama of the thing and endeavored to pass it off as a satire. It was a ruse, however, which was not successful.

"Branded" has come and gone, at all events—the independent playwrights have had their fling and paid for it. Nothing more need be expected from them, according to the law of averages, until this time next season.

As intimated in these pages several weeks ago, an immediate effect of the impending theatre ticket tax has been to cause the hotel agencies to stop, look, and listen before making outright buys of tickets for a considerable number of weeks. The agencies have recently become so powerful that they have been able, by giving or withholding their approval of a ticket buy, practically to dictate which shows should come into New York and which should not. This has been particularly true in the case of the small producer, who, not having unlimited capital at his command, frequently needs the money advanced by the agencies to keep his production alive. In the case of one musical show now on the boards, in fact, the deal between producer and agencies was consummated, and the money paid, before the manager was able to produce the show. In other words, the show was really produced by the agencies.

Recently, however, in view of the impending tax on ticket premiums and the consequent reduction of profits, the agencies have been refusing to guarantee the purchase of seats for a period extending beyond the date that the new law becomes effective. The ticket broker, of course, must take his losses with his profits, and a reduction of profits naturally compels him to takes moves to reduce his losses. The general effect of all this, of course, is highly beneficial, as it helps to put the plays on a purely competitive basis, and increases whatever chances the average citizen may have of being able to purchase a pair of seats at the box office.

The manager of the Pitt Theatre in Pittsburgh has created something of a ripple in film circles by changing his theatre from a picture house to the legitimate on the ground that there are not enough good pictures to keep up the standard of his theatre. The announcement of plans for the house, incidentally, includes a number of interesting ventures. For example, Pittsburgh will have for the first time "Hindle Wakes," "The Three Daughters of M. Dupont," and "The Devil's Disciple." It is also promised that John Barrymore will play "Justice," and James K. Hackett and Viola Allen will appear in "Macbeth." Mr. Hackett will also be seen in "Othello," of which the complete production, designed by Joseph Urban and paid for by James K. Hackett, has been languishing in a New York storehouse ever since Mr. Hackett almost produced the play at the Criterion several seasons ago.

After all, it appears that Henry Miller will not be able to open his own theatre with himself and "Anthony in Wonderland." The Miller Theatre is showing no signs of being finished before Spring, and accordingly it is probable that "Anthony in Wonderland" will be brought into the Criterion before many months have rolled around. The honor of opening the new theatre in that event probably would fall to Ruth Chatterton.

Considerable surprise was occasioned early in the week by the news that William Faversham had undergone a nervous breakdown, and that his New York opening in "The Old Country" had accordingly been postponed. Mr. Faversham, ever so incidentally, has been a persistent first-nighter this season, not having missed a première up to and including Wednesday night.

Elsa Ryan, one of the most successful of the many actresses who succeeded Laurette Taylor in "Peg o' My Heart," will head a company of "Out There," which will embark for points west of Chicago within a few weeks. The Eastern territory is being saved for Miss Taylor, who will spend next season on tour in the comedies of Manners, which she is gradually accumulating.

WILDA BENNETT ARRIVES.

THE rapid rise of Wilda Bennett, who seems to have blossomed forth as a performer to be reckoned with in "The Riviera Girl," probably is attributable to the fact that, unlike most girls who desire stage careers, she studied. Her rise, though rapid, is not sensational; it is merely the result of her fitting herself for her profession.

Miss Bennett came to New York in 1908 from Asbury Park, being one of the few persons who were born there. Almost instantaneously she was given the rôle of Conscience in "Everywoman," Henry W. Savage waiving her inexperience when he heard her voice, (the part called for the singing of two songs.) She continued in the play for three years, playing it two seasons here and one in London. Meanwhile, lest the fact be forgotten in the hurly-burly, she studied.

The following year she spent a somewhat discouraging season in the Belasco production of "The Good Little Devil." She had accepted the rôle of Queen Mab, despite its inconspicuousness, for two reasons—it called for the singing of the only song of the evening, and it was a Belasco production. At the opening performance in Philadelphia the song got two encores, interfering so seriously with the progress of the piece that it was forthwith elided. Miss Bennett somewhat dejectedly played out her season, and then retired from the stage for a year to continue her vocal studies.

Upon her return she played the title rôle in "The Only Girl," which is the part in which most theatregoers recall her. She spent two seasons in this piece, and in the Spring of last year, after rehearsing in a pair of pieces which failed to reach the stage, she succeeded Julia Sanderson for a time in "Sybil," sharing the spotlight with Donald and Joe. It was this circumstance, perhaps, which led to the general comparison of Miss Bennett with Miss Sanderson at the opening of "The Riviera Girl" last Monday, and the prediction that Miss Bennett would some day be as equally

WRITTEN ON THE SCREEN

STRAND.—Marguerit Clark in "Bab's Diary."

RIALTO.—Clara Kimball Young in "Magda."

BROADWAY.—"The Fall of the Romanoffs."

GLOBE.—"Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp."

PARK.—"The Burglar."

LOEW'S NEW YORK.—Monday and Tuesday, "The Whip."

81ST STREET THEATRE.—"The Man Without a Country."

THE hopes of motion picture men that they would escape war taxation were dashed to the ground by the House on Monday, and as the bill now stands the movies will have to bear a heavy share of the burden. As originally drawn, the war tax measure exempted theatres charging an admission fee of 25 cents or less, which, of course, was equivalent to exempting the picture theatres. The revised bill, however, calls for a tax of 10 per cent. on all tickets over 5 cents, and, as the five-cent movie is almost a thing of the past, the film patron will now have to pay and pay and pay.

The movie admission tax, like the theatre admission tax, is payable by the patron, but the movie men themselves will not escape altogether. There will be a footage tax on all films sold by the manufacturer to the producer, and another tax on all films told or rented by the producer to the exhibitor. It is only fair to add, in passing, that the men of the movies were far from unanimous in opposing the tax. A great many were ready and willing to bear their share of the burden, and even went to the extent of inviting taxation.

Three of the long awaited Goldwyn films have been shown, and the new company is now fairly on its way. Further Goldwyn films which are soon to be seen are Jane Cowl in "The Spreading Dawn," Mae Marsh in "Sunshine Alley," Mabel Normand in "Joan of Plattsburg," by Porter Emerson Browne; Madge Kennedy in Edgar Selwyn's "Nearly Married," and Maxine Elliott in "The Eternal Magdalene." The last named, incidentally, is the first of the films which Arthur Hopkins has directed.

Two of the films already released by Goldwyn have been above the movie standard, while the third was just a motion picture. The new concern accordingly has an average of .666, a figure which certainly places it in the first division of movie makers.

Maclyn Arbuckle as John Tarleton in "Misalliance" at the Broadhurst.

Being compelled to abandon the Globe Theatre to make way for the great Fred Stone, William Fox will revert to the Lyric. A week from tonight, at that theatre, Mr. Fox will show still another of the pictures which he seems able to turn out with such consummate ease—"Cleopatra," this time, with Theda Bara in the title rôle. Mr. Fox, by the way, is probably the most prolific of all the movie producers. An estimate made by a well-known picture man last week was that Mr. Fox now has about $5,000,000 tied up in his various picture ventures, and that the sum is constantly increasing.

A. H. Woods, who has a way of knowing a good piece of property when he sees it, has purchased a half interest in "The Fall of the Romanoffs," paying $125,000 therefor. There is no doubt that the film is one of the three or four best pictures yet manufactured, and the canny Mr. Woods is in a fair way to make a considerable amount of money. The film will remain one more week at the Broadway, and it is probable that it will then be moved to another theatre.

The Rialto's Mr. Rothapfel scorned to call his new motion picture temple the Triumph, as the building now going up at Broadway and Forty-ninth Street was tentatively christened, and it will instead be known as the Rivoli. To the suggestion that the movie folk emulate the legitimate by naming their theatres after the big people of the profession Mr. Rothapfel was not receptive. But it is inconceivable that the Pickford Theatre and the Douglas Fairbanks will not be standing somewhere on Broadway before many seasons have rolled around.

The next Fairbanks release will be "Reaching for the Moon," and this time the new thought faddists will provide the background. Undoubtedly it is the Fairbanks stunts and the Fairbanks smile which make for the popularity of his pictures, but the only Doug has not been content to depend upon those alone. In nearly all of his films there has been a real idea somewhere at the bottom of the fun.

Comes now a denial of the death in battle of Ernesto Pagani, known hereabouts and elsewhere as Maciste. Harry Raver, who is handling the Maciste films in America, is authority for the denial. Mr. Raver further added that the bulletin announcing Maciste's death was distinctly unwelcome, as the news, if true, would have interfered seriously with certain plans for Maciste's future which Mr. Raver is nourishing. Which, after all, hardly can be denied.

Malcolm Williams, it turns out, has also fallen for the films. He is playing a rôle in the picturization of Rupert Hughes's "Empty Pockets," which Herbert Brenon is filming over New Jersey way.

It will be good news to those to whom it will be good news that the next Chaplin picture will be released on Oct. 22. It is called "The Adventurer," and the long period between the last Chaplin film and this one, if it was long, was caused by Mr. Chaplin's illness.

Carlyle Blackwell, comes an announcement, is somewhere in the neighborhood of his 400th motion picture, and still going strong. This number includes a number of short films, but the total number of releases is probably in excess of that of any other actor. Mr. Blackwell has been seven years in front of the camera.

In the midst of the general hurly-burly of film life another huge organization for the manufacture and release of pictures has been organized in the last two months, and so many are the changes in the industry that its coming has occasioned scarcely a ripple. The new company is the Select Pictures Corporation, in which Lewis J. Selznick is a moving factor. The new concern will distribute the films made by Clara Kimball Young's company, (both Miss Young's own films and a comedy series featuring Ray and Gordon Dooley, yet to come,) the Norma Talmadge films, the Constance Talmadge films, Eva Tanguay's picture, "The Wild Girl," and all of Alice Brady's future films. Miss Brady's pictures will be made by the new concern as well as distributed by them. Still other films which the company will handle will be Rita Jolivet in "Lest We Forget," a war film now nearing completion in the Bronx; "The Public Be Damned," a film shown at the Strand several months ago, and John Barrymore in "Raffles."

The newest thing in war films is "The Freedom of the World," which has just been completed after months of labor in Philadelphia and Canada. The Goldwyn Company has undertaken its distribution.

One or two same words come from Rex Beach apropos of the sensational movie serials. For instance:

"Despite the millions of dollars that have been put into sensational serial pictures, there has not yet been produced a single 'thriller' in chapter form that makes an appeal reaching further than the optic nerve of the spectator.

"The bigger magazines learned long ago that they could not successfully and profitably publish serial stories based on suspended interest unless there was something back of the suspension that led to something in the end.

"We all remember the catchpenny stories that used to leave the reader breathless at the line 'Continued in our next,' and disgusted when the next instalment failed to carry out the promise of the last paragraph of the preceding one.

"Motion picture 'hang-ups' that lead nowhere are not going to keep on getting money for producers indefinitely. The industry is rapidly becoming rid of the producer who believed that motion picture audiences would stand for anything because the price of admission to the theatres was only ten or fifteen cents."

The name of Alice Brady's next picture has been changed from "The Red Mouse" to "Her Silent Sacrifice," a combination born to be the title of a movie, if ever there were one.

News comes from Bar Harbor, where the new Annette Kellermann picture is being photographed, that matters are going along as well as could be expected, and that the first part of the picture is finished. How many parts there are, however, is not included in the announcement. The name of the picture is "Queen of the Sea," and three guesses will be given as to who will play the title rôle.

Geraldine Farrar is making another in California, this time a picture called "The Devil Stone." This will give movie fans at least a pair of Farrar films to look forward to during the opera season, the other being "The Woman God Forgot."

Elsie Ferguson's next film will be "The Rise of Jennie Cushing." A number of the scenes are laid in New York's East Side.

A benefit performance for the house fund of the Screen Club, the foremost organization of movie actors, will take place Tuesday night at the Eighty-first Street Theatre. The feature of the evening will be the taking of several movie scenes on the stage.

David Warfield, in a speech made in the West a few days ago, referred to an offer of $1,000,000 if he would spend one year in the films and make "The Music Master" and "The Auctioneer" into movies. He refused the offer, incidentally.

Fionzaleys Feel the War.

Ugo Ara of the Fionzaleys is the latest of many musicians gone to the war. His successor for the coming season of the famous quartet as already announced is Louis Bailly, a French viola player arriving in America this week. The change is not unexpected, as Mr. Ara's sympathies in the European conflict have been strongly marked.

His early inclinations were toward the medical profession, an ambition strengthened by an outbreak of plague which caused many deaths in his boyhood home. Lack of physical stamina forced him to give up the idea. His present assignment to the Italian Ambulance Corps is probably in accordance with his own request. Mr. Ara has felt a deep conviction as to the moral right of Italy and her Allies, and a high sense of duty prompted him to make the sacrifice of severing his connection with the Fionzaley Quartet until the close of the war.

Mr. Ara was born in Venice, and neither of his parents was musically inclined, though his own love of music was shown at an early age. He studied at the Benedittо Marcello Conservatory and at the age of thirteen years became a member of a theatre orchestra in Venice. Later at Liège he continued his studies under Cesar Thomson, and there he first met Adolfo Betti, Alfred Pochon, and Ivan d'Archambault. After an illness of several years, during which he made some essays at composition, he went to the Conservatory of Vienna. It was from there that he was induced to give up the violin to accept the viola part in the Fionzaley Quartet.

Franko, the Silver King.

Nahan Franko, who forty-seven years ago "came to Cincinnati in fear and trembling" as an eight-year-old prodigy with Carlotta Patti, and who ten years later studied again in Cincinnati under Cincinnati artists, returned there last Summer "as virtuoso and master-conductor," according to The Times-Star. It was a home-coming for Franko and his audiences at the Zoo. The leader "caught all eyes instantly," and it was observed that "his pompadour is streaked with gray." He returned the compliment by saying, "The Zoo is a dream, the most beautiful park in America." The Cincinnati Post awarded him "the palm of conquest among the various flings for outdoor approval" of a Sunday in Ohio. The Inquirer praised his orchestra of fifty men, his personality, and the practice of playing violin while he conducted, in the style of Eduard Strauss. A new sounding board helped the bandstand acoustics, and the music was called the best since Theodore Thomas led concerts at the Highland House in early days.

WHO'S WHO ON THE STAGE

YOUNG FLORENCE NASH, whom the public mind has been associating almost exclusively with pert comedy rôles of the Aggie Lynch-"Within the Law" kind, surprised even her keenest admirers last Tuesday night by the vividness of her performance as the Russian immigrant in "The Land of the Free." About a year ago, also, her sister Mary, whose forte was dramatic rôles of the variety generally called strong, joined Grace George's répertoire company and played high comedy parts with success and considerable éclat. The deduction, obviously, is that the Nash sisters, Florence and Mary, are at least a bit, be it ever so small, out of the regular run of actresses.

The father of the sisters was the late Phil Nash, a theatrical booking man widely known in the profession a decade ago. The girls, accordingly, grew up on the fringe of the business, and from their earliest childhood it was a settled matter that both were to be actresses. Florence is younger than Mary by one and a half years, but she was the first to make her début on the stage. The event took place in one of her father's stock companies in Hoboken one day, Florence deserting school for the occasion and neglecting to advise her parent what she was doing. The director of the stock company was the late John Bunny, who had not yet begun to think of motion pictures, and the company included Frank McIntyre, Frank Byrne, and Ivah Wills, (later Mrs. Coburn.) The play of the week was a little thing called "Lost Twenty-four Hours," and Mr. Nash's astonishment, when he visited the company at the first performance and found his daughter in the cast, may well be imagined.

The career of Mary, at present at its height with her success in "The Man Who Came Back," has been for the most part plain sailing, but the stage life of Florence has been one long attempt to avoid being a type. On the occasion of her second stage appearance (with Arnold Daly in "Boys of Company B") she chanced to be cast in a lisping rôle, and did so well with it that she was straightway cast for another in "Hook of Holland," a musical comedy. "Algeria," another musical show, followed, and once more Miss Nash was requested to lisp. This time she set her foot down solidly and refused, and when the "Algeria" engagement was ended she declined all musical comedy offers, although it was a field in which she was beginning to make a name for herself.

There then followed the foolish ingénue era, in the course of which Miss Nash played parts of varying opportunity with De Wolf Hopper and Tommy Ross, and also in the Belasco production of "The Lily" and in a dismal failure called "Patsy." To escape ingénues she first dip into vaudeville, her vehicle being William De Mille's sketch, "In 1999." Upon emerging from the varieties she was cast as the slangy Aggie Lynch in "Within the Law"—and once more the managers arose and cried out that Florence Nash was born to play slangy parts and nought else.

Two years of "Within the Law" were followed by a year of the same sort of thing in "Sinners," and then still more of it in vaudeville in a sketch by Willard Mack. That brought her up to the beginnig of last season, at which time offers to do slangy heroines were catapulting in. In the van were the motion-picture magnates, offering huge sums of money for the privilege of emblazoning Miss Nash in celluloid, providing only that she would play a slangy crook. Miss Nash hung out a sign on which was written "No slangy heroines"—and waited.

Her wait lasted an entire season, and meanwhile her friends frantically implored her to act anything at all, lest she be totally forgotten by both managers and populace. But she had the courage to remain idle an entire season, a move which found justification last Tuesday when "The Land of the Free" was produced. Whatever the merits or ultimate fate of that piece, it has at least won Florence Nash's point for her. She is not solely dependent on slangy heroines.

ALEXANDRA CARLISLE, who plays the businesslike Nancy Price in "The Country Cousin," has been more or less of a business woman herself since she was 14 years old. When she was that age her father announced that he planned to make her a school teacher. This was in London. Miss Carlisle promptly announced that she would be anything else but that. Her father opined that his mind was made up. She announced that her's was, too. She had learned a bit of stenography and typewriting in school, and she got a position as a "typist." But it palled on her before long, and when the chance came to play a tiny part in one of the big Christmas pantomimes she embraced it. After a season or two of that she succeeded in getting herself cast for the part of a Cockney girl in a company about to make a "provincial tour" in Henry Arthur Jones's "Whitewashing Julia." She signed up for the staggering salary of $10 a week.

A gentleman bearing the somewhat flossy name of Sylvanus Dauncey was the presiding genius of the organization, he being the playwright's brother-in-law. During rehearsals Miss Carlisle overheard him remarking that he wished he could get a good, cheap secretary and accountant to take along. She volunteered for the task, agreeing to do it in her off moments. She reluctantly consented to have an additional $2.50 forced on her every Saturday night for the extra service.

So capable did Miss Carlisle become that Mr. Dauncey presently delegated to her practically the entire business management, frequently going away for a week at a time to visit other companies under his direction. She bought the railroad tickets, attended to all the other transportation details, "counted up" the house after the performance, prepared the press matter to be sent on ahead, and continued to play her part. And continued to draw the $12.50 a week, no more and no less.

She then went with James Welch, the most popular farceur in London, and from his company she went to Granville Barker to understudy Lillah McCarthy in "Man and Superman." From that time all was clear sailing. She was one of the Gibson girls in "The Catch of the Season," and was eventually picked by Nat Goodwin as leading woman for his London season in "An American Citizen" and "The Gilded Fool."

This engagement "made" her, and she became one of the most important and popular leading women in London. She played Portia in one of the late Sir Herbert Tree's revivals of "The Merchant of Venice," and she created the leading rôles in a number of American successes brought to England, among them being "Alias Jimmie Valentine," "Bought and Paid For," "A Woman's Way," and "Everywoman."

Miss Carlisle first came to this country about nine years ago to play with Joseph Coyne in "The Mollusc." She later returned to create the leading rôle in "The Marriage Game," and three seasons ago was John Drew's leading woman in the revival of "Rosemary." She was also leading woman for E. H. Sothern in "The Two Virtues" two seasons back.

She is married to an American physician who is now doing his bit at one of the encampments "somewhere in France."

Three Entertaining and Profitable Lecture Lessons By

DR. KATHERINE M. H. BLACKFORD

Y. M. C. A. Bedford Branch Auditorium.

Entrance on Monroe Street.

Successive Thursday Evenings at 8 o'Clock,

October 11, October 18, and October 25, 1917.

Subject: HOW TO SIZE UP MEN.

Dr. Blackford has studied people in all parts of the United States and Canada and in eighteen foreign countries for the past eighteen years. She has learned how to judge the real characters of men and women by looking at them. She has taught her methods to thousands of business and professional men. She formulated the Blackford Employment Plan, by means of which many corporations and firms are now saving money by selecting employes well fitted for their work. Several firms retain her to give advice in the selection of applicants for important positions. People she has trained are doing this work successfully in a number of organizations.

This series of lecture lessons will be definite, so that every hearer will learn something he can use in his business.

PRICES: Course of three lectures, Reserved Seat, $2.

Oftentimes people find standing room only at Dr. Blackford's lectures. So it will pay you to order seats early.

Tickets on sale at Liggett's Drug Store, 20 Court Street, Brooklyn.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION AND STOCK MARKETS

Business Safety or Chaos

What stands to-day between business and utter confusion?

The Government of the United States.

By its policy in stabilizing prices, the Government is acting as the balance wheel of business, permitting the purchase of both raw and finished material at reasonable rates, and distributing the colossal demands caused by the war in such a way as to work a minimum of hardship and at the same time to conserve fair profits for all.

The Government of the United States is to-day the greatest factor in American business prosperity and likewise is in itself the greatest business in the nation, operating for the good and the safety of all.

From motives of good business policy as well as of patriotism, the Government therefore deserves the financial support of all business men, through purchase of the United States Government Bonds of the Second Liberty Loan.

Money invested in these bonds is money invested to ensure the success, the permanency, and the safety of American business. To test the all-inclusive truth of this statement, ask yourself the question,

"Where will America and American business be if Germany should win?"

Only in victory is there security.

To ensure victory, the Second Liberty Loan must be promptly and fully subscribed. Do your part. Go to your bank and subscribe for your share of these bonds. They bear 4% interest. They are free of the normal Federal income tax and all local property taxes. They are quickly marketable and are the best of collateral.

Subscribe at once and buy all you can.

FINANCIAL MARKETS.

Prices Irregular, but in Most Cases Little Changed—Surplus Reserve Increases.

With only moderate activity the stock market fluctuated within a narrow range yesterday morning and closed at about the previous day's final price level. The session was marked by an unusual volume of transactions in two low priced railroad issues—New Haven and Southern—which had the rare honor of figuring among the four most active stocks. New Haven closed at its best price for the day at 30¼, up 1⅜, while Southern Railway common, after getting up to 28⅝, closed unchanged. There was nothing new brought out in the affairs of either road to explain the heavy turnover, but there has been considerable buying among all of the lower priced rails by investors who are just as well content to hold non-dividend payers while the war taxes are in force. Both issues are now at levels from which further recessions are not expected to reach far, and they look attractive to investors who are willing to hold stocks paying them no return until conditions improve. Steel common closed at its lowest price for the session at 107¼ after selling at 108⅝, while Bethlehem ended the day at 86⅛, off ⅞. Midvale declined two points.

The Street is still in the dark as to the bearing which the new war taxes will have on business, while expecting unfavorable results. There is a great deal of work ahead of the Treasury Department in clearing up many points on which the law is vague, but it is obvious that even with a favorable interpretation upon the clause assessing a tax of 8 per cent. on earned incomes of individuals the law will still take heavy toll of 1917 income and necessitate some radical readjustments.

The weekly bank statement showed an increase of nearly $7,000,000 in surplus reserves, bringing the excess up to $83,989,000, the largest total since Sept. 8. Loans increased $16,099,000, demand deposits decreased $13,552,000, and time deposits increased $8,594,000. The Federal Reserve Bank showed an increase of $28,000,000 in rediscounts for the week, and an increase of $9,000,000 in acceptances purchased.

Peace talk continues in the financial district, though it is hard to find any justification for it in the reports of those acquainted with the real situation of Germany and her ability to withstand much further punishment of the kind so ably administered last week by the forces under General Haig. The stock market cannot be said to have shown any signs recently of discounting the ending of the war. In the light of the declines brought about by the development of the new revenue scheme a definite indication of peace, holding out the promise of a repeal of the war taxes, ought to exert a favorable influence on prices.

CLOSE COTTON CORPORATION

Last Tax Levy Made for Relief of Holders of Long Contracts.

With the payment, on Oct. 16, of the last of its outstanding notes, amounting to only 5 per cent. of the original issue, the Cotton Trading Corporation will be liquidated and its affairs entirely wound up. The corporation was formed on Nov. 16, 1914, by members of the New York Cotton Exchange, to carry the large stock of "distress" cotton on the market because of the war and the blockade of Germany, and permit the Cotton Exchange to reopen.

For this purpose $3,000,000 was required, and was secured by subscriptions among cotton men amounting to $1,500,000, and by borrowing the remainder from fifteen different banks, giving notes of the corporation, to pay 6 per cent. The money was then used to buy nearly 200,000 bales of cotton for the relief of holders of long future contracts, paying up to 9 cents a pound, although the market price was then around 7 cents. The $3,000,000 was to be paid off by a tax levied on all sales on the New York Cotton Exchange. The last tax levy was made Sept. 29.

The leaders in the formation of the Cotton Trading Corporation are being congratulated by their fellows on the cotton market upon the successful conclusion of their enterprise. Altogether, the $3,000,000 necessary to carry it cost the Corporation only about 4 per cent. per annum.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Keeping an Eye on Steel.

The final market session of the week left many things to be desired by bullish traders. The irregular course of prices failed to leave any impression on the trading mind of what Monday was likely to bring forth. Steel's decline of 1⅛ points was disappointing to persons who have been watching this stock closely for the last fortnight for evidences of the first real turn-about in the market situation. Steel is looked on as the issue which should be among the first, if not the very first, stock to reflect the true economic factors contained in the Government's price-fixing program. So far the shares have told only of uncertainty among investors and speculators. If it should break down in decided fashion one of these days the Street would consider the movement as proof of adverse effects of the steel price schedule. If it should get away for a substantial upward swing the products of fixed prices would be thought to be satisfactory as far as the net earnings to be made under them were concerned.

New Haven in Demand.

Several large buying orders in New Haven were put through yesterday, according to Stock Exchange gossip, and the turnover in the neighborhood of 10,000 shares was large for a half-day. It was impossible to decide from the character of the buying whether it represented short covering, chiefly, or genuine purchases for the long account. Brokers have reported for several days that accumulation of certain of the low-priced rails was going on. There have been such large declines in these issues that their speculative possibilities as regards a recovery have caused considerable discussion among commission house traders.

The Bank Statement.

Yesterday's bank statement showed a $7,000,000 increase in surplus reserves, bringing the total surplus up to $84,000,000, the highest in two months with the single exception of Sept. 8, when the surplus stood at $87,000,000. For the week, loans increased approximately $16,000,000, and deposits (demand and time) decreased $5,000,000. The associated banks report Government deposits aggregating $229,000,000, against which no reserve is carried. Despite the purchase of Treasury certificates of indebtedness which amounted to about $200,000,000, or one-half of the $400,000,000 offering—the proceeds being placed to the credit of the Government as a deposit—the Clearing House figures show that Federal deposits decreased about $11,000,000, the falling off being due to the large advances made by the Treasury to the various foreign governments.

War Risk Rates Rise.

Local underwriters quoted the war risk on cargoes going through the Panama Canal into the Southern Pacific at 1 per cent., double the rate prevailing for some time. News of German commerce raiders in the Southern waters impelled the change, and there was also a stiffening of the war risk on cargoes going out from ports on the Pacific side of the continent.

Increase in Rediscounts.

The report of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York indicated an increase of $28,000,000 in rediscounts and advances, and an increase of $9,000,000 in investments in acceptances, the total for "bills bought and discounted" expanding from $148,000,000 to $185,000,000. The weekly statement further showed a $20,000,000 increase in investments in United States Government securities, the same no doubt representing the purchase of a small block of Treasury certificates. Government deposits with the Reserve Bank increased about $5,000,000 for the week, the total on Friday night aggregating $32,815,000. The volume of Federal Reserve notes outstanding was enlarged by approximately $7,000,000, the total now amounting to $289,485,000, an increase of $140,000,000 in three months. All except $84,000,000 of the $289,485,000 of notes is secured by the deposit of gold and lawful money with the reserve agent.

The Ship Chartering Committee.

The Chartering Committee of the United States Shipping Board now has "a local habitation and a name" in the Custom House, next door to the local offices of the Shipping Board itself. Perhaps next week, shipping men are now saying to one another hopefully, the Administration in Washington will clear away the present mists of uncertainty as to just what the Chartering Committee is to do and what authority and scope of action it is to have.

Another Shipping Grievance.

The present being the time for shipping men to air all their grievances, just as the steel and copper men aired theirs before they found out what the Government was going to do to them, several operators yesterday seized the occasion to inquire whether the Chartering Committee, in its rate decisions, is going to make allowances for the increased expense to which American shipowners are put for the extra large gun crews the Navy Department insists upon putting on their ships, and for the extra accommodations and food which these naval officers and men demand. The British and French, in arming their ships, have never thought it necessary to put more than from two to four men, oftener two than four, to a gun, on board each merchantman, these men being merely the skilled pointers and men experienced in caring for the guns, the merchant sailors being able to pass ammunition. But the United States Navy Department considers it necessary to put anywhere from sixteen to thirty-two men on board every merchantman, with a commissioned officer, who has to have a cabin to himself, and often several petty officers. In the opinion of more than one shipowner, about two-thirds of these gun crews could be dispensed with, relieving the owners of a considerable expense, and at the same time relieving the fleet of a shortage of trained men due to the demands of the merchant service.

COPPER PRODUCERS FACE HARD PROBLEM

Many Believe That There Cannot Be Enough of the Metal to Go Around.

ARE NOW ARRANGING POOL

Method Being Worked Out for Handling Nation's Output Violates the Sherman Law.

Copper producers have worked out some of the details of a pooling arrangement for the proper distribution of the country's refinery output, and further developments are looked for this week. A committee headed by Joseph Clendenin, chief of the Sales Department of the American Smelting and Refining Company, has held numerous meetings, and tentative arrangements to open an office at 60 Broadway have been made. It is expected that when the committee dealing with copper distribution has been fully formed it will contain a representative of the War Industries Board and will have full powers to decide on priority of orders.

The new departure in selling copper is the natural outgrowth of war conditions and the establishment of one price for all consumers, whether Government or private. The producers know that, in view of the war demands of the Allies, there will be a tremendous pressure upon output in the next six months if the majority of consumers are to be supplied. Some of the big copper men make no secret of their belief that there cannot possibly be enough copper produced to go around. The United States Government is to get all it needs, the other Allied Governments are to get what they need, and then the metal remaining will be apportioned out among the consumers who are working on Government orders and do not have their supplies arranged for by the Government agents. After these orders are filled, the manufacturer of goods not necessary for the prosecution of the war will be attended to.

It was learned in the copper trade yesterday that practically no shipments of metal from the refineries on other than Government orders had been made since Oct. 1. While the price of 23½ cents a pound for copper for all deliveries has been established, little if any business has been done on this basis except in behalf of the Government. Sales of reclaimed copper—metal obtained by melting down scrap—have been reported for some days past at prices ranging between 26 and 27½ cents a pound, and a fair amount of copper has been resold by holders of old contracts at corresponding quotations. As the Government's ruling on prices has been interpreted, only producers of primary metal are bound so far to stand by the 23½-cent quotation, and this is the reason manufacturers with urgent needs to fill have been able to get small amounts of copper from the outside sources.

See Violation of Sherman Act.

The method now in process of evolution for handling the country's copper production steps flatly upon the Sherman law. The exigencies of war have necessitated the practical abrogation of the famous statute for the time being, and copper men are wondering whether some lasting effects will not remain after the war. The pooling arrangement for domestic and foreign business comes well within the class of business phenomena which the courts frowned on severely not so long ago. It is hardly to be expected that a copper pool for home business will be tolerated when the war ends and the need no longer exists for a careful apportionment of supplies, but a pool for foreign sales is another matter.

Before the United States entered the war a bill was up before Congress having as its purpose the legislative sanction of co-operative agreements between exporters for sales abroad. Copper-producers had high hopes that they would be permitted to control the tonnages and prices of metal sold to foreigners, and now they have the opportunity ahead of getting practice along this line. As the manufacturers of brass and copper goods in England, France, Italy and Russia, who are doing war work for their Governments, will make their purchases through the American War Industries Board and the copper committee, they will learn the possibilities of a controlled copper market in this country.

The after-war market is, however, a matter which is receiving secondary consideration among copper producers just now. The economic problems contained in the fixing of one price to all buyers are enough to keep them busy for some time.

"The vital matter," says the Engineering and Mining Journal, in discussing the situation, "is the reiteration of the theory of one price for all and the threat of force unless it is granted. It is said that the producers agreed to this. We may imagine their assent as being given while they were under duress. They could readily agree to keep copper out of the hands of speculators, for they do that anyway, it having been an ancient policy of leading producers to sell to none but consumers. But how can they give copper at the same price to everybody if they have not the copper to give? What is the manufacturer of electrical apparatus, of lamps, of pins, of tacks, of rivets, &c., going to do if he asks for copper at 23½ cents and is told there is none for him?

Some in Unfortunate Position.

"Suppose he says that he will give 24, 25, 26, or even 30 cents if some can be diverted to him, and the producer replies that it cannot be done else his mines will be seized. But suppose the consumer goes to a seller of copper from mines in Cuba, Peru, Chile, or Spain, what will Washington do about seizing those mines? Or suppose he goes to a seller of copper reclaimed from scrap and there are no mines to be seized? How are consumers who happen to be oversupplied going to be prevented from reselling at their own price. Fortunate will be those manufacturers who have provided for their requirements by average price contracts. Unfortunate will be those who have contracted to deliver finished goods at prices based on the quoted price for copper and have not provided for their raw material.

"The Government did not need any promise from the producers that they would maintain maximum production. They would not be so unpatriotic as to curtail production out of pique, and they would naturally produce all they could so long as they did not incur loss. Let it be quoted, however, that the negotiations, studies of cost, &c., have been confined to the large producers and have taken no account of the position of the scores or hundreds of small producers whose copper, considerable in the aggregate, passes through many hands.

"They are supposed to follow the lead of the big fellows. The question is: Can they? And if they cannot, their men will not necessarily become available to the more economical producers, for the latter may not have the plan in which to use them. The wiseacres who figure the margin between market price and bookkeeping costs overlook that what seem like stupendous profits have gone to a large extent into plants to supply the increasing production that is required, and that such outlay may have to be amortized 100 or 50 per cent., which makes the real cost of production a very different thing from what it appears on books kept in the ordinary way."

PLAN NEW EXPORT CONTRACT

American Concerns in Brazil Considering Radical Changes.

Exporters, manufacturers and shipping men interested in the South American trade are at present industriously studying a new form of export contract, which has been drawn up by the representatives of eight of the biggest American export and shipping concerns at São Paulo, Brazil, the largest center of American trade in South America.

The men who drew up the contract have pledged themselves to have it printed, in future, on the back of every confirmatory letter of any c. i. f. (cost, insurance and freight) sale they make, and to include in the face of the letter a clause which binds both parties to the agreement on the back.

"The buyer," this clause reads, "declares that he has read the seven clauses written on the back of this letter, which he accepts as to all intents and purposes an integral part of this document." The seven clauses of the contract provide a number of departures from existing practice. The first announces that "the responsibility of the shipper as regards delivery ceases once the merchandise is embarked," as it is then "on the account and at the risk of the buyer, and the shipper does not assume any responsibility for its arrival—nor for any damage."

The third clause also expressly except the shipper from responsibility in case "strike, floods, fires, accidents, disasters, delays and other difficulties in land or marine transportation—and for other causes independent of the will of the shipper." Moreover, under clause 4, "in time of war—the shipper will insure the merchandise against all war risk and without the necessity of consulting the buyer, the cost of this insurance being for the account of the latter."

None of the big firms involved have yet, so far as known, given their approval to this new form of contract submitted by their representatives.

COMMODITIES PRICES.

The General Tendency of Them During the Week Was Upward.

The tendency of wholesale prices last week, as reflected by Dun's list, was even more strongly upward than in the previous week. For the first time in a long while the foodstuffs failed to contribute more changes than any other group, though this part of the list continued to show an excess of declines. Altogether there were eighty-three revisions, including fifty-two advances, compared with a total of seventy-eight in the week before. Then the advances numbered forty-six.

The following list gives the minimum wholesale prices quoted on thirty-nine standard commodities last week at this city, unless otherwise specified. They [illegible] Oct. 5, and with them are given comparative prices for the pre[illegible] and the corresponding week a year ago:

| | Last Week. | Prev. week. | Year Ago. |

| Potatoes, bbl. | 4.50 | 4.25 | 3.75 |
| Wool, av., 100, Phila., lb. | .753 | .746 | .379 |

Only one variety of flour was quoted in the list last week, and it showed no change. In the provisions here, bacon was higher, with hams unchanged. At Chicago the provisions were more unsettled than for some time. Declines were seen in live beef, live hogs and prime lard. Live sheep, mess pork and short ribs advanced. The vegetable list showed another rise in potatoes, and with it came higher prices on cabbage, onions and turnips. Choice pea beans also went up. A rise in choice evaporated apples was the only change shown by the fresh and dried fruit lists.

In the dairy products butter prices ranged from firm to higher, and this also was true of cheese. Eggs were steady at the recent decline. The margin now existing between this and last year's egg prices is smaller than for months. In the coffee market there was a further drop in No. 7 Rio, but last week No. 4 Santos did not change. The spice list produced declines in Zanzibar cloves and black Singapore pepper. Fine granulated sugar fell off somewhat, but it is still comfortably higher than at this time in 1916. Rice advanced again, this time three-quarters of a cent a pound for domestic fancy head stock.

There was little of interest in the metals list, due to the price-fixing activities of the Government. The only change shown by the whole list, in fact, was a drop in tin. In many cases quotations were withdrawn from the list. For the first time in several weeks more declines than advances were listed in the combined markets for drugs, chemicals, dyestuffs and oils, the respective figures being 12 and 10. Turpentine and resin were quoted higher in the naval stores.

In the grains market lower prices were seen on corn, malt and rye, with the only advance contributed by malting barley. In the lumber list there was more price revising than for a very long time. The only decline, against ten advances, was in LLA flat yellow pine. The week's miscellaneous change included advances in Eastern spruce lath and spirits (Cincinnati), and declines in hops, F. P. R. S. zinc paint, Brazilian crude rubber and steam filature silks at Shanghai.

The leather market continued to show no notable quotable change, but the undertone was apparently stronger in sympathy with the firmer tone to hides. In the latter list five of the ten grades quoted on were higher. There were no declines.

The week brought no marked change in woolen and worsted goods or silks, but the sharp upturn in cotton resulted in a number of advances being recorded in cotton cloths. Among them were many varieties of drills, sheetings and printcloths. Still higher prices were quoted on burlaps, with business practically at a standstill because of the scarcity of goods.

STILL CONFERRING ON STEEL PRICES

Government Committee and Manufacturers Seeking Agreement Satisfactory to All.

FEW NEW ORDERS RECEIVED

Buyers Are Waiting for Final Fixing of Quotations — Expect No Loss in Profits.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, Oct. 6.—No additional iron and steel prices have been announced since the Government statement of Sept. 24, to the effect that Lake Superior ore prices have been reaffirmed, valley foundry and basic pig iron had been set at $33, and bars, shapes, and plates had been set at $2.90, $3, and $3.25, respectively. The manufacturers of other commodities have been holding meetings for about a week for the purpose of agreeing upon prices to be submitted to the War Industries Board, which would make public announcement of such prices as met its approval.

It is understood that prices on a number of commodities have been submitted, but no announcement is expected until next week. Compared with the average market prices of the ten years ending with 1913, the prices already set show the following advances: Pig iron, 110 per cent.; bars, 1006 per cent.; shapes, 90 per cent.; plates, 117 per cent.

Not a great deal of business has thus far followed the announcement that orders for about 7,000,000 tons of steel were expected by the steel trade, from the Government and its Allies. The proportion of the steel output intended directly or indirectly for war use, including shipments to th Allies, is now in the neighborhood of 25 per cent., while the prospect is that eventually the proportion will exceed 30 per cent. The actual tonnage would exceed the total output of Great Britain, and probably the combined output of that Nation and France.

Pig iron production in September was at the rate of 38,500,000 tons a year, the smallest since last February. Production thus far this year has been at the rate of 38,750,000 tons, against actual production in 1916 of 39,434,797 tons. As regards capacity, the production should have materially increased, as several new furnaces have been built, but the shortage of coke, has caused ovens to fall far short of their performance last year.

Lake Superior ore shipments in September amounted to 9,536,549 tons, and prospects for the total season movement, including all-rail shipments, are for about 64,000,000 tons, against a little over 66,000,000 tons in 1916. The decrease is due to the late opening of navigation last Spring, the ice in Lake Superior having stayed unusually late. There will be no ore shortage at the furnaces tributary to the region.

Market Is Inactive.

Eastern producers like the Bethlehem Steel Company, which find imported ore extremely expensive at present, will hardly be able to draw from the Lake Superior region to any great extent.

The iron and steel market as a whole has been altogether inactive in the last week, the inactivity being ascribed to the fact that prices are being fixed on an altogether new basis. As all shipments in future are subject to the jurisdiction of the Priority Board, it will do little good for a buyer to have his order on the books of producers long in advance of the expected shipment, and this incentive to forward buying will be lacking, as well as the incentive that often exists that prices may be higher in future. Except for Government buying, a very quiet market is to be expected for months, while the mills operate as fully as physical conditions permit.

The fact that the Priority Board will regulate deliveries is occupying the attention of buyers and sellers of the different steel commodities. The Washington authorities have announced that three classes—A, B, and C—would be observed in their deliberations as to prices, the first letter covering war material for the Government and its allies, the next letter material that is for the general good of the country in war time, and C to cover all else that is left from the other two sections.

A slight misunderstanding here resulted from the orders of the Priority Board several traders believing that shipments could not be made without a priority order, which would have stopped all operations of the steel industry. But this has been cleared up, and the mills have been told to simply give priority to business for which there are priority orders.

Conferences have been going on all week between the Government officials and steel men's committees to determine steel prices, and will last for a while yet, as there are so many phases of the industry that must be separated from each other, and the authorities are anxious to have the whole trade satisfied and no loophole for genuine complaint left. With the prices for bars, shapes, and plates already attended to, the rest of the regular steel mill output will be gone over and prices adjusted with equity to all sides.

Sheets Main Topic of Discussion.

Sheets have been the main topic of discussion so far, and the makers have talked seriously of higher than 6 cents for black sheets, while there seems to be an impression that the War Industries Board has a price in mind not higher that 5 cents. Blue annealed sheets will be harder to determine, for the reason that the product of the jobbing mills, which make these sheets, reach clear down to plates and clear up to the black sheets, in the matter of gauge or thickness, yet the established differentials fall alogether short of bridging the gap.

This makes possible a revision of the differentials, which the trade does not invite, although it is no worry to Secretary Daniels, who has placed a number of orders, cutting out differentials entirely and fixing a base price which shall apply, no matter what the gauge.

The course of the market lately has tended to confuse the issue. At approximately the lowest prices done in years past plates were 1.05 cents, blue annealed sheets 1.30 cents, and black sheets 1.70 cents, showing blue annealed sheets $5 a ton over plates, and black sheets $8 a ton over blue annealed. Instead of these gaps widening they close up, so that, roughly speaking, the average market for months past has been 8 to 10 cents on all three products.

While the billet and sheet bar market has been quiet, at least one sale of 1,000 tons of billets is reported at $60. However, it is thought that when the billet price is fixed there will be no offerings for some time, so that wherever a buyer really needs the commodity he is likely to buy now, when buyer and seller are free to talk as high prices as they like. Every steel man spoken to here seems to think that the billet price will be fixed at $50, but there is a wide diversity of opinion as to the probable price of sheet bars. The present trade differential is $1, yet opinions run from $2 to $5 as the differential after price fixing.

The National Tube Company is booking orders in tubular goods at the same rate as formerly, as the price fixing now in the making has not affected the business a particle. Its prices for standard steel pipe have been unchanged since last April, when it issued its 55 per cent. list. All other mills but the Republic advanced to a 49 per cent. basis, and some advanced a second time, to a 4[illegible] per cent. list. The National's shipments last month were fully [illegible] per cent. in excess of production, while production was materially less than capacity on account of shortage of materials and labor. In fact, this condition applies to the entire pipe trade. The mills are sold far ahead on butt weld pipe, and still further ahead on lap weld. There is a great demand for such lap weld pipe as is used in the oil country, and much more could be put to use than is available. Jobbers and consumers are agreed that the pipe price schedule, when fixed, will be on the basis of the 55 per cent. list in force for six months by the leading interests and the Republic.

Ever since the fixing of prices began on iron and steel products the scrap market has been weakening, and it is felt here that the decline in pig iron will eventually be reflected in scrap. Dealers' asking prices are not much lower, but their bids are decidedly lower. Heavy melting steel is quoted at $30 to $34, bundled sheet at $21 to $24, No. 1 cast at $25 to $30, and No. 1 railroad wrought at $30 to $32.

Regarding the coke market, no one seems to know when the differential for foundry coke above furnace will be announced, so that for the present the market is quotable at $6 for furnace or foundry coke, spot or contract. Enough sales of furnace coke are being made from day to day to establish $6 as the actual market price, apart from its being the only legal price at which coke can be sold, but the volume of transactions is limited. Occasionally the sales are made by middle interests, who both buy and sell at the $6 price, simply as an accommodation to customers from whose business they have made a great deal of money in the past.

CO-OPERATIVE DELIVERY SYSTEM A SUCCESS

Economy Board of Defense Council Shows that It Has Resulted in Big Saving Where Tried.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 6.—A study of co-operative delivery systems, undertaken several months ago by the Commercial Economy Board of the Council of National Defense, has shown that such systems have commonly saved from 40 to 50 per cent. in investment and operating costs as compared with the individual systems replaced. The first results of the investigation, covering co-operative systems in forty-seven cities and towns, have just been made public by the board, together with a number of practical suggestions on installing similar systems.

Of the forty-seven cities and towns studied, the board found that the co-operative plan had been a success in thirty, a failure in five, and doubtful as to results in twelve, largely because the systems in the twelve places had only recently been installed. These cities and towns are located in twenty different States and range in population from less than 1,000 to more than 200,000.

Several factors, the Board states, contribute to the saving which generally results from co-operative deliveries. Depreciation charges on vehicles are generally reduced because, instead of several wagons or trucks covering a single district at the same time, one does the work. Several supervisors are replaced by one and a unified and more economical planning of routes is made possible.

The five suggestions made by the board are intended to help merchants who are not experienced in organizing and carrying on co-operative deliveries to avoid the pitfalls which have generally been the causes of failure.

First, the board says, particular pains should be taken to obtain impartial valuation of the equipment turned over by the co-operating merchants. In some cases old harness and old wagons have been given in at figures far exceeding their true worth.

Second, the board suggests that merchants planning to co-operate consider the advisability of establishing a central station where parcels can be brought and grouped, according to routes, where C. O. D. collections can be turned in, and where all the business of the system can be concentrated.

The board's third suggestion is that all details connected with C. O. D. orders be worked out with great care. This is one of the most important problems. It requires for its solution responsible drivers, a special accounting system, and a definite agreement with merchants as to when they may expect returns.

Fourth, there should by all means, the board declares, be a competent executive in charge of the work.

The fifth suggestion is that when a co-operative system takes over delivery work for any merchant, under the usual plan of a flat charge for each delivery, it should be understood that all deliveries are to be handled through the co-operative system, and that there are to be no separate deliveries by the merchant.

The board is continuing its investigation with a view to making available still more complete and comprehensive data on the subject. It is now prepared, however, to supply advice and information in some detail to associations and individual merchants who are considering the establishment of a co-operative delivery system. Inquiries may be addressed to the Commercial Economy Board of the Council of National Defense, Washington, D. C.

FINANCIAL MENACE IN AUSTRIA-HUNGARY

Dual Monarchy Has Piled Up a War Debt of Nearly 25 Billion Dollars.

GOLD RESERVE DOWN TO 5%

Enormous Rise in Food Cost, Poor Substitutes, and Serious Coal Shortage.

By JULIAN GRANDE.

BERNE, Aug. 27.—Austrian finance would require a special and long article to itself. It is, to say the least, scarcely sound, and complex beyond the comprehension of any financier. According to the Austrian Parliamentary Public Debt Committee, the Austrian war debt alone, excluding that of Hungary, amounted at the end of 1916 to 31,400,000,000 kronen. Add to this the 12,-608,000,000 kronen which Austria owed before the war, and another 1,763,000,-000 kronen interest; then add about 40,-000,000,000 kronen for Hungary's indebtedness, (as far as Hungarian official vagueness allows this to be known,) and the sums which must be paid for widows', orphans', and disabled soldiers' pensions, plus the promised indemnities for Galicia and the Bukowina, and a sum of 120,000,000,000 kronen is reached, (not far from $25,-000,000,000.)

Austria, however, keeps her engagements in a fashion peculiar to herself, and not always altogether satisfactory to her creditors. Swiss financiers have just discovered with alarm that Austrian paper currency has only 5 per cent. gold reserve as cover behind it, as compared with about 21 per cent. in Italy and Germany and 44 per cent. in England at the end of May 1 last. Again, 500,000 persons in Vienna alone, a city of about 2,000,000 inhabitants, are admittedly in receipt of relief at present; the municipal accounts of Vienna last half-year closed with a balance on the wrong side of about 37,000,000 kronen, (say, nearly $7,500,000,) while Budapest, with a population of about 880,000, at the end of 1916 had a deficit in her municipal accounts of 500,000 kronen, exclusive of a heavy sum for the cost of hospitals.

High Cost of Living.

Meanwhile, to descend to details of daily life, an outspoken Viennese journal is actually allowed to describe the situation as regards food as "dear, dearer, dearest," and to give chapter and verse by citing the following rises in the cost of first necessaries since the war:

Meat: Risen from 2 kronen to 12 kronen per kilo (2 2-5 pounds.) (The krone may be taken at its pre-war value, about 22 cents.)

Butter: Risen 200 per cent.

Sausage: Risen from 400 per cent. to 800 per cent., according to kind.

Eggs: 250 per cent. dearer.

Apples: 400 per cent dearer.

Dried figs, fully 2,500 per cent. dearer.

French beans: Risen from 20 heller (about 5 cents) to 4 kronen a kilo.

Shoes and suits of clothing: Risen 300 per cent.

Good Winter materials: Risen 800 per cent.

The Hungarian crop of beans, lentils, buckwheat, and peas has been commandeered this year, and also the Austrian potato crop, (a potato car being promised the Austrians for the Autumn,) and much of the Austrian fruit crop. In other words, there is a shortage of potatoes, one of their principal sources of food supply. By way of attempting to supplement the food rations, the public is recommended to keep rabbits, and to try to shoot and eat crows. It is officially forbidden to waste any bones, which must be handed to the authorities in order to have the fat extracted, and then be crushed for manure; soap cards are promised for the end of this month or for early September, and already there is a candle card, limiting the consumption of candles to three a month.

What must, however, be a greater trial and a far greater danger to the public than all these petty restrictions, is the ever-increasing number of "substitutes." Pounded horse-chestnuts, for instance, with the oil and bitter taste removed, are recommended as a substitute for flour; the dogwood cherry, dried, as a substitute for chocolate (now very scarce;) and all manner of other things are being put to some purpose for which they were never intended. Doctors complain of the number of worthless foods for children on the market, intended to atone for the shortage of milk.

An enterprising chemist recently examined and analysed the chief of these "substitutes." The countless egg-substitutes, he says, are mostly baking powder dyed yellow with a little starch; chicory, dandelion roots, chopped carrots, buckwheat, and a variety of other articles form "coffee substitutes," while substitutes are also sold everywhere for lemons, cocoa, sugar, meat, milk, and heaven knows what besides.

Coal Shortage Serious.

Most serious of all the Austro-Hungarian domestic questions and privations, however, is the scarcity of coal, which is such that it was seriously proposed to shut the Viennese schools in the coldest time of Winter. Against this suggestion the sensible Bürgermeister of Vienna induced his City Council to vote unanimously, arguing that the children would need warmer school buildings more than ever next Winter, and that the schools ought to keep open beyond the usual hours About 30,000 miners have been sent from the front to work in the mines, in order that, if possible, Vienna and the other Austrian cities may not suffer from cold, as well as malnutrition.

But the scantiness of the coal supplies is evident from the complaints of the laundries that they do not know how to heat water for washing their clothes; of the jam manufacturers that they receive their fruit and even their sugar, and cannot make their jam, and the fruit goes bad because there is no coal; of the hotel keepers and restaurants that they have had no coal for weeks and do not know how to cook, and, finally, from the tailors, who say that they cannot heat their irons, and have actually had to send new suits home unpressed.

FINDS LABOR SITUATION BAD IN ALL SECTIONS

National City Bank Says Nation Is Trying to Do More Work Than It Has Men For.

The National City Bank in its October bulletin says that the labor situation is disquieting in all parts of the country, and, except for the good crop yield, which gives promise that foodstuffs will not generally go above present levels, it would be alarming.

The bulletin points out that it is not surprising that with high prices prevalent on all sides, wage-earners should claim more pay, but calls attention to the fact that the disquieting thing is that higher wages mean still higher prices, thus furnishing an argument for still more pay.

"At least," says the bank, "the explanation is that the country is trying to do more work than there is labor to do it with. A vast amount of work is being done under rush conditions for the Government, and the contractors have offered wages that would bring labor out of the regular industries. Sixteen cantonments have been built in different parts of the country at a cost of $150,000,000, in three months, and about 8,000 to 10,000 workmen have been employed on each. The influence of this upon the labor situation has been widespread.

"Numerous shipyards are under construction, steel works and munition plants are crowded with orders, and hundreds of new coal mines are struggling to get a share of the labor supply. The point has been reached where it is a serious question whether any further construction work should be done unless directly required by the war emergency. Where is the use in enlarging capacity, when the present capacity of the industries cannot be manned? It may seem to an individual that he can enlarge his business profitably, but if he can only operate the new capacity by hiring labor away from other equally important works there is no gain, and the entire level of costs is being constantly raised by this process. It is reported that the Government in some instances has taken steps to prevent its contractors from hiring labor away from each other, where all were working on a cost plus percentage basis, but something like that competition is occurring all around the industries. A movement to check it would probably be resented by the wage earners, and, like all price fixing, is open to serious objections. The real remedy all around is indicated by the high wages and prices; it is for the public to curtail consumption, in order that labor may be released for the war work."

START SCHOOLS FOR ALIENS

Employers Will Try to Make This a One-Language City.

The Fifth Avenue Association, the largest employer of alien labor in New York, announced yesterday the starting of an Americanization campaign to help make this a one-language city. It will work in co-operation with the Committee on Aliens of the Mayor's Committee on National Defense.

Robert Grier Cooke, President of the association, named a committee consisting of Gage E. Tarbell, Chairman; Harris A. Dunn, Walter W. Maynard, Samuel W. Raeburg, William Geppert, and Robert H. Koehlerm to urge members to establish classes in English in their shops. The Board of Education will provide instructors.

THE COTTON MARKET

Reported Cold Weather Caused Rush to Cover — List Closed Steady.

Reported cold weather and threatened frost in the South Atlantic States, greeting the local market at its opening yesterday morning, caused something of a rush to cover when trading began, but reassuring news kept the rise in prices within limits, and the market did little more than regain a fraction of the ground lost in Friday's reaction. December contracts at one time touched 25.90, more than half a cent above Friday's closing figure, but slid back to a closing figure of 25.52. The general list closed fairly steady, 11 to 15 points up.

The action of the early market reflected the extreme nervousness of the trade over crop conditions owing to the lateness of the season. It is apprehended that anything like an early frost would cause a further sharp scaling down of estimates, and even if yesterday's forecast did not suggest any immediate damage of consequence, it served to emphasize the proximity of the frost period. Covering was also stimulated by an absence of Southern hedge selling early in the morning, and reviews of the dry goods trade indicating a firm tone with an advancing tendency of prices. The market opened firm at an advance of 11 to 23 points, and the active months sold 45 to 57 points net higher shortly after the call. Demand then tapered off, and Southwestern selling was a feature on the reaction of about 33 to 43 points from the best.

The official forecast was for frost in the interior of North Carolina, in exposed places of South Carolina, and for light frost in northern parts of Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi. Fair and warmer weather was predicted for the western belt and warmer for Alabama and Mississippi tomorrow. It appeared, consequently, that the cold snap was to be followed by favorable conditions, and the talk on the late forenoon reaction was that light frost in parts of the eastern belt might prove more beneficial than otherwise.

It was expected that the bill permitting neutral vessels to the coastwise trade, having been passed, would be signed promptly by the President, and there may have been some buying early on an idea that this would result in a larger supply of tonnage available for transatlantic business. At the same time, some of the more prominent local spot merchants say they do not believe that exports of cotton this season will exceed 5,000,000 bales.

USING OLD TIN CANS.

If the Japanese Can Do So, Why Can't Americans as Well?

The use being made of old tin cans in Japan, which has been brought to light by the necessity of applying for licenses to export all products containing tin, has raised the question as to why American manufacturers could not do likewise. For some time it has been the custom of the Japanese merchants to utilize the five-gallon cans, in which American firms send petroleum products to the Far East, to ship vegetable oils to this country. At the end of this second journey, the oils being emptied into tank cars for overland transportation, the cans usually have been dumped into Puget Sound.

With the rising price of tinplate, the Japanese merchants on the West Coast conceived the idea of using these cans for the material that was in them and, cutting them up to save space, shipped them back to Japan. They were sold to manufacturers of toys, export cases for lining, bottle caps and dustpans.

A recent number of Commerce Reports points out that the cans can be bought at 9 cents apiece, or about $72 a ton. "The ultimate consumer in Japan," continues the Report, "has been known to pay as much as $1.50 a ton for the cans delivered at his factory. It is understood that certain California fruit packers have already used some of these cans for making tops for fruit baskets. The Department of Commerce would be glad to see their utilization for domestic manufacturing purposes increased, and the Exports Administration Board will welcome inquiries relative to the possible purchase of quantities of them."

Catalogues Should Be Dated.

The suggestion is made by Consul James O. Laing, who is stationed in Batavia, Java, that American exporters who are not already doing it, should put the date, or at least the year, on catalogues intended for foreign trade. He mentions an incident of finding a catalogue on the files of the consulate, which, on investigation, proved to be the vintage of 1895.

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE

The list opened strong on the Consolidated Stock Exchange, but the strength evaporated and the gains that had been made in the first fifteen minutes were lost, being replaced by actual declines in many instances. The rails were steadier, the low-priced issues being in demand. The market was a very narrow one, commission houses contributing only a small amount of business and professionals dominating in the trading.

COMMODITIES MARKETS

WHEAT.

The movement of wheat during the week showed a falling off, instead of increasing, as expected, and while the loss was small, it is evident that the movement is not getting under way as rapidly as had been hoped for by the Food Commission. This seems to be the most important factor in the situation, as not only are American mills in urgent need of wheat with which to fill their orders for flour, but Europe as well is depending upon America for supplies. The Government report on Monday is expected to show a crop of around 240,000,000 bushels of Spring wheat, or slightly under last month's figures.

Rye.—Market steady; No. 2 Western, $1.95, cost, insurance, and freight, New York.

CORN.

The corn market on Saturday showed weakness despite killing frosts in some of the important corn States of the Middle West. The trade, however, believes that frost at this date will be more beneficial than otherwise and consequently cold weather has lost its bullish significance. The volume of business was not particularly large, but it is evident that longs were inclined to liquidate probably in anticipation of a bearish Government report on Monday afternoon. Old cash corn continues scarce and while prices have declined somewhat they are still very firm and close to the $2 mark. December corn in Chicago is selling at around $1.19 and it seems questionable whether farmers will be willing to sell their early corn at such a low figure compared with the old crop. In the local cash market No. 2 yellow corn was quoted at $2.07, and No. 2 mixed at $2.06, cost, insurance, and freight, New York.

OATS.

Prices in the oats market declined ¼c to ⅜c in sympathy with corn, although, as a matter of fact, the undertone of the market was steady. Receipts for the week were disappointing, and as long as there is no accumulation of stocks the trade is likely to hesitate about pressing the selling side. The local cash market was steady; standard quoted at 67½c; No. 2 white, 67@67½c; No. 3 white, 66¾@67c; No. 4 white, 66@66½c; fancy clipped white, 68½@70½c; ordinary clipped white, 66½@68½c, all elevator.

PROVISIONS.

A very firm undertone developed in the market for hog products, with small offers and a fair demand, prompted by reports that the extent of purchases recently by the Belgian Relief Commission had been quite large, including 10,000,000 pounds each of lard and meats. The hog market was a trifle easier, but receipts continue small. Chicago receipts of hogs today were 4,000, estimated for Monday, 20,000, and for next week, 75,000; Kansas City received 700, and Omaha, 3,200 hogs.

COTTONSEED OIL.

Prices in the cottonseed oil market were strong and higher, advancing to new high records with small offers and a good demand. [illegible] based largely on the crude position and the fact that crude oil in the South is selling at $1.25 per gallon or considerably above a parity with the local market for refined. Final prices were 10 to 39 points net higher, with total sales of 27,000 barrels. Range of prices:

COFFEE.

The coffee market showed continued steadiness yesterday, with a moderate volume of business. The firmer technical position again seemed to be responsible for the advancing tendency of prices, with near-month shorts among the chief buyers. After opening 2 points higher, active months sold 6 to 9 points above Friday's closing figures, but the advance was checked around 7.56 for March and the close was a few points off from the best under realizing, showing a net gain of 4 to 5 points. Part of the business was in the way of exchanging from near to late months, including December for July, at 60 points. The local spot market was quiet, at 8⅝c for Rio 7s and 9⅝c for Santos 4s. ### BUTTER AND EGG MARKET.

BUTTER.—Receipts yesterday, 9,518 packages. Under accumulating supplies, a lessened demand, and strong pressure to sell prices declined ½ to ¾c on most grades of creamery, and at the lower figures the market is still very much unsettled. Renovated eased off a little, and the tone on packing stock and ladles was not so firm. EGGS.—Receipts yesterday, 9,823 cases. The tone of the market is unsettled and irregular. The very highest grades of fresh gathered stock are fairly well sustained, but medium and low grades are weak and dragging, and there is more pressure to sell refrigerator eggs without much round lot business reported. Fancy nearby eggs continue scarce and firm. # VARIED PHASES OF THE COUNTRY'S BUSINESS LIFE

THE MERCHANT'S POINT OF VIEW

Business men, in common with many others not of their class, hailed the end of the session of Congress with a feeling of relief. No previous session in the history of the country compares with the latest one in the number and variety of enactments affecting industrial and mercantile activities. Not only have all the domestic industries been subjected to more or less of official regulation, with the fixing of prices or the restriction of transportation of products, but the whole of the foreign trade, inbound and outbound, has been put under rigid control. Then, too, arrangements have been perfected for taking a larger toll of the profits of industry in unwonted ways, some of which appear to impose burdens inequitably. Added to these disturbing factors has been the tremendous enlargement of the fighting forces of the nation, which has drawn upon the man power of practically every kind of occupation, and the raising of the biggest of national loans, which has and will continue to take from the investment reservoirs and the savings of all the people. A pause in further Government activity is therefore relished, in order that the effects of what has been done may be seen and understood and the requisite adjustments made which the new conditions require. Thus far, aside from the increases in the price of commodities, there has been little evidence of embarrassment. This is due to the stimulation of productive activity resulting from the war needs of this country and its allies.

Financial Factor in Export Trade. So far as a check on too great a restriction of exports is concerned, one consideration is the financial one, as was pointed out in the report of the special committee on exports of the National Foreign Trade Council the other day. From South American and other countries not at war the United States imports vast quantities of raw materials. From a number of countries the imports are greater than are the exports from this country. When things were normal and sterling exchange was the medium through which trade balances were settled, the exports to various European countries—including the United Kingdom—could be used to offset the excess of imports to this country from other foreign countries. The war has changed this. Great Britain, France, Italy, and other belligerents have become debtors to this country to a very large extent, and have been unable to pay their own debts, much less to offset them against debts due by this country. As a consequence, there is great danger of a continual drain on the specie in this country and an unsettlement of exchange which would result in the purchasing power of the dollar being lessened in countries from which the United States obtains so much of its raw material. Great Britain and Germany, by reason of their large investments in foreign countries, were, before the war, not in this position. The income on those investments formed the offset to any unfavorable trade balance and steadied exchange. This may in the future be the position of this country. Meanwhile, it must export as much as possible to the countries from which its imports are large.

Move Against Government Control. Those who have laid most stress on the danger of German competition after the war have been emphasizing the supposed advantages which the manufacturers and producers in Germany will have because of governmental partnership. The schemes for business control by the authorities which have been worked out in theory are very alluring. They include the creation of trusts in each industry, with collective buying of raw materials by the Government and collective selling by the latter of finished products at certain fixed prices. Then these articles were to be transported over the Government-owned railways to Government-owned steamships, and sent at low rates of carriage to foreign countries, to be there sold at prices much less than the cost of production in them of similar products. A certain profit was to be set aside for the original owners of the plants, the remainder being retained by the Government to help pay its expenses. Practical men in Germany are, however, pooh-pooing the scheme and are organizing a protest against it. They say that bureaucratic management of industries is bound to result in their deterioration as well as in checking improvements in processes, with the consequence that it will be hopeless to try and keep up trade in foreign countries against manufacturers in other lands who are not handicapped by officialdom.

Those Shoe and Leather People. In the vortex of agitation over economies to be practiced during the continuance of the war, the shoe and leather people have been thrown. Six months ago the Commercial Economy Board called to Washington a number of representatives of the trade and urged them to make none but black shoes, and those not more than six and one-half inches high. The idea was to save leather. The shoemakers urged that there was plenty of leather, and that to do as the board wished would destroy the business of about one-third of the retailers of the country. On this statement the matter was put in abeyance for six months to enable retailers to move their stocks and the manufacturers to fill the orders they had taken. The other day another conference was held. Manufacturers reported a large reduction in the number of styles they were putting out, so that in 1918 there would be only 94 styles of women's shoes, instead of the 173 there were in 1916, and, of men's varieties, only 112 in place of the former 175. If the styles dropped are those which have been giving so much trade to chiropodists, the whole country, aside from them, will be thankful. Apart from this, the action taken, so far as the adopted resolutions go, seems rather lame and inconclusive. A wider use of low shoes is recommended, as well as a reduction in manufacturers' samples, and a limitation in the use of expensive cutting leathers. Other suggestions are that manufacturers concentrate on the kinds of goods they are best equipped to make, the curtailment of the slaughter of calves, the checking of cancellations of orders and return of goods, and arranging of deliveries so that they may be evenly distributed. Nothing was said, however, as to making shoes cheaper for the consumer. Unless this is done, there will be less buying of shoes and more cobbling. Something of this kind is already apparent. Mr. Pierre Jay, Chairman of the Federal Reserve Bank Board for the Second District, called attention to one phase of this the other day, saying that "shoe sales have been larger in dollars, but smaller in the number of pairs sold, the tendency of retailers being toward reducing stocks and extreme caution in buying."

Errors as to the Facts. A lot of misinformation seems current regarding the wool situation. Many who believe they are doing a real patriotic duty in urging certain steps toward the conservation of wool are really helping to make matters worse. Here, for example, is the National Sheep and Wool Bureau, whose purpose seems to be to encourage the breeding of sheep in this country, which has issued a bulletin whose effect will be to alarm people needlessly and aid in raising the prices of domestic wool even beyond the high point already reached. The bulletin states such absurdities as that the United States clip is under 250,000,000 pounds, and that the number of sheep is under 40,000,000 and declining. Both statements are utterly wrong. The clip, according to the Government figures, is nearly 40,000,000 pounds in excess of the figure given, and the number of sheep in about 50,000,000, and is increasing. Perhaps the milk in the cocoanut of the bureau is shown in the statement that "everything considered, the present holder of wool has conditions in his favor if his greed does not tempt him to overstep the mark."

Wool and Cotton Mixtures. Even some of the agitation following certain hearings before the Commercial Economy Board in Washington has not been entirely profitable. The suggestion made by the board to woolen manufacturers was to conserve the wool supplies by making use of shoddy and cotton in combination with virgin wool. The manufacturers did not need the suggestion, having been long engaged in doing what is now urged on them. Latterly, owing to the high price of new wool, there has been even a greater than usual resort to substitutes or adulterations. The case is cited of a large dress goods mill which in September, 1915, had 31.7 per cent. of its equipment engaged on cotton warp fabrics. This percentage was increased in September, 1917, to 77.2. The largest of the men's wear organizations has had a similar experience. When it comes to worsted fabrics, many mills are not equipped so that they can use cotton warps without shutting down a large portion of their machinery. This would mean additional cost of production and permanent loss of labor organization. These things were shown by the woolen and worsted manufacturers, who also declared that the cessation of making all-wool fabrics would result in still larger importations of them from abroad. They suggested that efforts should be made to secure from Great Britain the release of from 200,000,000 to 300,000,000 pounds of wool from Australia and New Zealand, which can easily spare the quantity. In connnection with this, it is worth mentioning that release of a quantity of Australian wool for Italian needs has just been agreed to by Great Britain. It was also announced on Friday that the British Government had finally agreed to the shipment to this country of the 25,000 bales of wool bought for the United States Navy. The new Australian clip is estimated at 2,000,000 bales, or over 600,000,000 pounds.

The Situation in Cotton. Following the Government report, with its estimate of a yield of only 12,047,000 bales of cotton, came some big jumps in the quotations. How much of actual cotton has been bought at the high prices is a question. The new crop is coming into sight very slowly, and the growers are emboldened to hold on to their cotton by the high market prices. They are encouraged in this also by a number of agitators who are predicting still higher levels, and there seems to be an organized effort to boost the prices. A regular convention of the boosters was held the other day in New Orleans, and a resolution was adopted agreeing upon 30 cents a pound as a minimum. Some were inclined to make the figure as high as 42 cents a pound. All objected to any price regulation by Congress or by any Federal officer or commission, but, with strange inconsistency, they expressed a willingness to confer with Mr. Hoover on the prices for cottonseed. Growers were urged to hold their cotton and borrow money on it in storage. This kind of action would be wicked—perhaps criminal—if taken with regard to foodstuffs. So far as cotton fabrics are concerned, they showed during the week a price strength in keeping with the advancing cost of the raw material. The manufacturers keep getting prices that would give them a very good profit, even at 30-cent cotton.

CREDIT SOUGHT BY TRICK OR DEVICE

Attempts by Fakers to Swindle Stores and the Preventive Measures Taken.

He was about 45 years old, well dressed, and rather good looking. In fact, his "goatee" gave him quite an air, so it was not altogether surprising that he made an impression on the clerk and persuaded the latter to submit the matter at once to the credit manager for settlement. Accordingly, the two men—clerk and customer—appeared soon afterward at the credit office.

"It is this way," began the customer, as he seated himself at the credit manager's desk. "I'm due to leave for Washington in less than an hour on important business, so important, in fact, that I have got to have a new suit. This is one of your suits that I have on, and as it is perfectly satisfactory I want it. The trouble is that I have mislaid my checkbook, and, unfortunately, have not enough money with me to pay for the suit. (It was priced at $65.) So I have come up here to open an account and have it charged."

The credit manager made known his intention of doing what he could in the matter and asked for references. The only city reference the man could give was a nearby store, and he sat where he was while an assistant telephoned to the store in question for confirmation. After a few minutes the assistant signalled the credit manager to come to him. The latter excused himself and went to see what the assistant wanted. From the latter he learned that the customer was an impostor; that he had tried the same game on the store he referred to and had "got away with it." On hearing this the credit manager took the wire and suggested that the other store send up a detective.

This was done and, although there was no doubt that the man had used this means of stealing a suit from the other store, the detective was afraid to take a chance and arrest him. Not a little of the detective's hesitation was due to the bluff of the swindler about the things that would happen if he dared as much as lay a hand on him, (the swindler) etc. The credit manager was convinced that he had a clear case of attempted theft, but rather than raise a row he gave orders that the man should be put back into his own raiment and escorted from the store.

"As serious as the matter was," the credit manager said yesterday in relating the incident, "there was one thing that struck me very funny—that the man should set part of the stage for his little play with our own scenery. He probably thought the fact that he had one of our suits on would overcome any possibility of our refusing to give him credit for it. Another chance he took was that we would not get in touch with the other store.

"But it is not men only who endeavor to take unfair advantage of the charge account. In more than one experience we have had here, women have been the offenders. It frequently happens, for instance, that a woman will come here and ask to have an account opened. She says she has accounts in other stores, but when we ask the names of them she will give only the stores in which her account is in good standing. Somehow she manages to forget the ones in which her bills are unpaid. Not only have unpaid bills been found in cases of this kind, but it has happened that unsatisfied judgments stood against the woman or her husband. In one case of this kind we found more than fifty judgments for various limited amounts that totaled large.

"In other cases it has been found that women will give as references stores in which their accounts have been paid with fair promptness, the object being to get additional accounts on the strength of these. When credit is granted in cases of this kind it almost invariably results in running up of bills that are left unpaid.

"It has also developed that a woman will sometimes seek credit and give as references stores in which there is no account in her name. In many cases where this is done merchandise will be bought on the day the application is made, with the request that she be permitted to take the goods with her. Purchases of this kind are usually small, and often consist of gloves, hosiery, &c. To let them go naturally means the loss of the merchandise, for in practically all cases of this kind the addresses given are fictitious. This kind of attempted fraud seems especially popular since the 'carry your small purchases' movement has been under way.

"Often a well-dressed woman will buy goods and, after the sale is completed, will present the personal card of some other woman who has an account and ask that they be charged to that account. In cases of this kind the clerk is in a quandary. The chances are about 100 to 1 that the clerk does not know by sight the woman named on the card, and the same is probably true in the case of the person who has put the O. K. on the charge. Refusal to charge the goods may not only lead to an unpleasant scene and to the ultimate injury of the store, but it is always possible that the woman who presents the card is actually the woman who has the account.

"What would happen in case goods were not charged in an instance like that is obvious. The account would be lost. Discharged servants have been known to try this scheme, saying they had been sent for the goods.

"The question may arise here as to why the presentation of identification checks or coins is not required in cases like this. In reply I can say only that this method is no real safeguard against fraud. Servants sometimes get temporary possession of these checks, and it is an open secret that they are lost by the dozen. Any dishonest woman who finds one of them can get away with $5 or $10 worth of goods with it if she looks the part and is insistent enough. The reason is that it is impossible in any big city for store employes to know all the charge customers, and naturally there is a strong disposition against risking accounts by refusing charges of small purchases.

"Sometimes women without charge accounts will stand at a counter beside a woman who has one and note her name and address as they are being taken by the clerk. Then she will come to the store some other day, use the name of the woman with the account, and order some goods sent to the address given. While she knows she cannot get away with much in the things she orders, there is always a small article or two that she can easily take with her, which she persuades the clerk to let her have. The clerk, knowing that there is an account in the name of the woman given, and fearing to offend, generally lets the goods go. When this happens the store may lose $5 to $10.

"Having told some of the things which retail stores, especially the credit departments, have to contend with, I am now going to tell you of the defensive measures we have adopted. First and foremost is the organization known as the Associated Retail Credit Men of New York City, Inc., which now includes in its membership the credit managers of more than 100 of the leading local shops and stores. Not only do the credit offices of these stores interchange actual ledger experiences regarding women who seek to open accounts and give member stores as references, but when fraudulent claims are made they are bulletined and sent out to all the members by the secretary of the organization.

"Thus it may be that Mrs. Jones, who has frequently worked a certain scheme for getting something for nothing, suddenly finds herself 'up against it.' If her case is serious enough she stands a strong chance of prosecution; in any event, her activities come to an end.

"The organization in question also reports on all cases of worthless checks; cases in which persons sought cannot be located, and cases in which it has been found impossible, for any reason, to collect for merchandise sold and delivered. In the short time the retail credit men of New York have been associated, they have done a great deal to lessen the losses of the stores with which they are connected. As time goes on, the activities of the organization are steadily being expanded, and the time is not distant when losses to the member stores through fraudulent or careless claims made by persons seeking charge accounts will be reduced to an absolute minimum."

AT FALL RIVER MILLS.

Demand Very Strong and Prices Showing Upward Tendency.

Special to The New York Times.

FALL RIVER, Oct. 6.—All divisions of the cloth markets showed pronounced strength during the week. It is months since the cotton goods markets have been so uniformly strong. The truth of the situation seems to be that buyers realize that mills have not a surplus of goods on hand, and, as cotton prices have soared to unusually high points, it was only natural to expect that cotton goods values would go higher. Some buyers feel that the Government will again be in the market for goods and will be given preference.

The demand for wide goods has been marked, and some of the mills which make these styles could have easily secured even higher prices than are now prevailing if they could only deliver the goods at once. The takings of narrow constructions have been large. Sateens, twills and specialties have been in good demand and some very large orders have been accepted on such goods.

Fine goods manufacturers state that they have been doing fairly good business during the week, and on some styles substantial advances have been made. The yarn markets have been very strong all week, and most spinners state that they are not in a position to take on any more business for some time to come, even at apparently high prices.

The total sales of cloth for the week are estimated at over 300,000 pieces, of which about 50,000 pieces are spots. The week closed with the demand very strong and prices showing an upward tendency.

RAW SILK MARKETS.

Those of Yokohama, Canton, and Shanghai Showing Weakness.

The Yokohama raw silk market has been rather quiet in the last week, and prices have taken a downward turn as a consequence. Altogether the market has dropped about 60 yen per picul. The period of heavy arrivals from the interior will be over soon, however, and stocks will not mount up so rapidly as they are doing now. At present the visible supply of Japanese raws is estimated at 16,000 bales.

Reports received by A. P. Villa & Brothers of this city say that the Canton market, due to the absence of demand and a jump in exchange, has also weakened to the extent of 20 to 25 cents a pound. As this drop is from a level that was never reached in this city, however, the present quotations on these silks there are still above those ruling in this market. The lack of buying orders from this country has also had its effect on the Shanghai market, where prices are rather weak for all grades of silk. European manufacturers are buying there, but not on a scale large enough to strengthen the market to any degree.

The Italian market at Milan continues quiet for American account, but the buying by Europeans is sufficient to keep prices well maintained. Local buying is still almost entirely of the hand-to-mouth order, and the manufacturers continue cautious as to future commitments.

BUSINESS IN GRAY GOODS.

Large Volume Done in Certain Constructions Yesterday.

Buyers of gray goods in this market yesterday were not a bit backward about coming forward, and the result was the disposal of a large volume of these goods. Big sales of 38½-inch 64-60s and 64-56s were reported for this year's delivery at 10¼ and 10 cents, respectively, and both of these constructions are now very scarce for 1917 shipment at any price. Large sales of 39-inch 56-44s were put through at 8⅝ cents for delivery during the remainder of this year, with many mills now asking 8½ cents for them.

There was not a great deal of activity in wide, high-count print-clothes, either for this or next year's delivery, but both 38½-inch 60-52s and 60-48s sold into early 1918 at 9¼ and 8¾ cents, respectively. In the coarser goods there was apparently not so much doing, though a nice business was reported on four-yard, 48-square sheetings at 11¾ cents. For four-yard 56-60s, 13 cents continued to be the best that could be done with any of the leading sellers. While there were further inquiries for drills, actual sales were limited by the desire of mills making them to have propositions submitted before acceptance by commission houses.

WAR ECONOMY IN SIAM.

Rules for Guidance of School Children Are Promulgated.

Following Siam's declaration of war against Germany and Austria, reports Vice Consul Carl C. Hansen from Bangkok, the Siamese Minister of Education has issued a circular to all the public schools in the Kingdom urging the teachers to impress upon the school children the need of economy in food, dress and transportation. The circular points out that jewelry or gold ornaments should not be worn while at school. It further says that the Siamese national custom of wearing different colored clothing for each day in the week need not be followed, and that wherever possible boys should walk to school rather than ride on street cars or in carriages.

In the girls' schools, the circular announces, the dress should be durable, but simple, and cheap. Ordinarily silk should not be worn, and if lace is added to the dress it should be made by the pupil. Gambling of all kinds among pupils is prohibited, and the teachers are cautioned to see that there is no wastefulness in the use of school books or stationery.

Underwear Shortage Develops.

The men's underwear market, according to local mill agents, is undergoing a period of keen demand, with available stocks to meet it at an unusually low ebb. Retailers are reported as clamoring for deliveries, which in most cases have been long overdue, and a number of them are said to have been forced to seek merchandise from other sources in order to meet their immediate requirements. Men's union suits, which will undoubtedly be in demand this season to fill up the gap left by the shortage in separate shirts and drawers, are also said to be rather scarce owing to many mills formerly making these garments having turned to the two-piece type in order to fill Government requirements.

Cut in Mexican Freight Rates.

Freight rates on agricultural machinery transported on the Constitutional Railways of Mexico have been reduced 40 per cent., according to a report from Consul General George A. Chamberlain in Mexico City. The new tariff reducing freight rates has been adopted, it is said, with the sanction of the Secretary of Communications and Public Works in Mexico.

GIFT NOVELTIES MUCH IN DEMAND

Artistic Quality Is What Appeals, and the War Has Not Checked the Trade.

One of the factors of peculiar interest in the retail business activity has been the steadily increasing demand within recent years for novelties and distinctive gifts. It is a condition that has been brought home very vividly to every shopper and to every careful observer of the shops in the retail centre. Gifts and novelties of attractive designs, such as were never dreamed of half a dozen years ago, make a bewitching appeal to one's generosity and pocketbook. Herein lies the subtlety of the art which gives many things ordinarily commonplace their distinctive novelty, tempting buyers to purchase, just because the articles do possess such a distinctive charm.

The gift shop idea, whose success lies in the production of novelties, is, in itself, no longer a novelty. It has developed from its early association with the suburban tea house or Summer resort souvenir store into a stable business, representing an investment of many millions of dollars in capital throughout the country and giving employment to thousands of persons. Its influence is seen, not only in the establishment of scores of individual gift shops, each stamped with a personality as distinctive as the articles on sale, but also in the recognition of the popular demand by the big department stores, all of which have installed special departments for novelties and artistic gifts.

New York City is the recognized manufacturing and distributing centre of the gift novelty trade. There are over fifty wholesale concerns here, and they report a constantly increasing market. One young woman of artistic ideas, whose wholesale quarters are in a Fifth Avenue building, has just filled an order for several thousand novelties for a Panama retail store. Orders have come from Mexico, and many orders from South America are now coming in, due to the difficulty of getting fancy articles from Europe.

The gentle art of giving has been immensely accelerated by the artistic touch imparted to countless household articles of real utility in addition to the purely decorative fancy gift products. Novel effects are now provided for every conceivable occasion. The growth of the business has made remunerative opportunities for hundreds of artists with the ability to design and color.

"It is the idea that people pay for," explained the proprietor of a large distributing agency. "That explains the good prices obtained for simple novelties. In its broader aspects it is a high-class trade, that is, it depends for custom upon persons of means who can afford from $2 to $5 for a novelty or pay $1 for a fancy article to use as a dinner favor. These higher grade novelties are hand made or hand colored. The coloring requires considerable skill, and some of the large wholesale houses frequently employ a dozen or more artists to color certain articles for a rush order."

The wholesale centre of the gift shop business is in the Madison Square section, while its retail activity extends all the way from Greenwich Village to upper Fifth Avenue. Some of the best of the "factories" are in the Sheridan and Washington Square centres. It would be more appropriate to call them studios, for their wares are practically all hand made or colored, each shop having its own distinctive designs. An artistic woman has a novel gift shop near Fifth Avenue, where every conceivable device may be ordered. If not in stock, the idea will be taken, handed out to an artist for practical development and, lo, another novelty is added to the thousands which have preceded it.

At one of the large wholesale firms on Fifth Avenue are samples of 3,000 different articles.

"Is business good?" queried the proprietor, when asked if the war was curtailing the public expenditure for luxuries. "It has never been better. This is the biggest year in the history of the fancy gift business. I had more orders on my books on October 1 than for the entire year of 1916. It is surprising how the gift shop business has grown, for it is a development of barely six years. The big demand today is for khaki articles, knitting bags and needles, in which the influence of the war is seen. Khaki is now being used for scores of things for which leather was formerly used, such as portrait cases, stationery portfolios, cases for handy articles, &c. One of the popular things is a testament bound in khaki, with a portrait case in the front and back, and thousands of these have been purchased as gifts to soldiers. The khaki gives a sort of military air to the article. It is a new departure, and the retail price is very little less than the leather article."

"The initial success of the gift shop business was in brass," said another dealer. "Then in rapid succession I have witnessed the fads of the public run the gamut of leather, tin, copper, and wood novelties, baskets, pottery, and glassware. These are all in vogue today in different designs. In the long run it makes little difference what the article is made of provided it is of a catchy or effective design. We are always on the lookout for new ideas to attract the buying public. In the individual shop, where many of the best original things came out, it is personality that counts for success. The initial capital required is not large. If the gift shop proprietor is of an artistic disposition, with the ability to select tastefully, not afraid of hard work and socially inclined, there is no reason why success should not result. New shops are being established all over the country. New England is a great gift shop centre, and the business is developing rapidly in the Middle West, while the Pacific Coast is the great headquarters for novelties in Oriental goods. The gift shop business is only in its infancy in spite of the tremendous advances in the last six years."

A lady who has a noted shop on Fifth Avenue which was started about two years ago, remarked that the war had no appreciable effect upon the novelty gift sales.

"Buying from the New York department stores began a little late," she added, "but the wholesalers are doing a better business now than a year ago. The knitting activity has made a great demand for fancy sets of knitting needles with hand colored caps. One of the popular sales has been a set, with caps painted in grandmother faces and small metal shoes for the needle points. Capacious knitting bags of linen, cretonne and other material attractively ornamented have also been in great demand.

"Children's gifts are always wanted and some of the most artistic designs of the season are presents for the little ones. Sailors' and soldiers' heads are very popular. Sewing sets are always popular. One of the latest things in this respect, which sells at retail for about $5, is a wooden figure of a stylishly dressed girl on a wooden pedestal with four spools of colored silk behind her. She carries a silk parasol with needles and pins on the inside. Fancy tin boxes and trays are having a good sale, but it is hard to get tin, and that material will probably have to give way to other things until the close of the war."

Sweater Market Active.

Spring buyers in the local sweater market are said to be taking, from those mills which are quoting for deliveries that far ahead, considerable quantities of merchandise for the 1918 season at prices frequently as much as 50 per cent. over last years' figures. In those sections where army training camps and cantonments have been established, there is reported an active demand for the two-button army sweater with military collar. There are, however, many mills which will not, at this early date, consider business for next year. They base their stand on the uncertainties of the worsted yarn market, the needle shortage, and the precarious labor situation, all of which, they point out, makes the matter of future manufacturing costs extremely problematical.

CLEARANCE OF CHECKS.

Complaints of Efforts to Make Charges for Collections.

The plan of check clearances approximating a par basis that has been brought about by the regulations of the Federal Reserve Board has led several banks, especially some of those not included in the reserve system, to devise ways in which to escape the par collection regulations of the Board and defeat the whole plan, according to the current bulletin of the National Association of Credit Men.

"The result," the bulletin continues, "is that our members complain that they receive every now and then checks marked with certain collection conditions such as 'Not collectable through a Federal Reserve Bank,' or 'Payable only at any bank member of a certain clearing house,' usually one located in a small city. The rules of this clearing house very likely would require the collection of a charge for the payment of a check.

"We believe that the efforts of the Federal Reserve Banks should have the solid support of business, as well as of the banking interests of the country, and that as an effective method our members should refuse to accept checks in payment of accounts when marked with such conditions as have here been cited. The should explain to customers why the refusal is made, so that the commercial interests of the nation generally shall appreciate what the opposition to the Federal Reserve collection plan means.

"By giving a clear-cut explanation to customers why checks with objectionable conditions attached are unacceptable, we will perform an important business service. We recognize that the bankers do not all see this matter from one viewpoint, but we feel certain that, as the new reserve plan gets into full operation and is better understood, the value of having our checks in settlement of accounts passing from one locality to another with the minimum of expense and complete freedom from taxation will be generally acknowledged."

SILK TRADE CONFIDENT.

Styles That Seem to be in Favor for Winter and Spring.

Though buyers from all sections of the country are reported to be congregating in this city, the local silk market last week was not very materially affected by their presence. In piece goods little activity was reported beyond the regular routine of trade. The dullness in Spring business, while due in part to buyers holding off, is thought to be more the result of manufacturers making no effort to take orders and, in some instances, to their actually turning down business owing to uncertainties as to manufacturing costs.

The week's trading showed satins to be in good demand, both for Winter requirements and for Spring delivery. This weave promises, it is said, to be one of the strongest for Spring and is sought in light and brilliant colors as well as in the darker shades. Taffetas are active, compared to the rest of the market, in combination stripes, plaids and in the solid dark colors, and crepes with Georgette in the lead are moving well. Many inquiries for meteor and foulards for Spring are coming in, and the prediction is made that they will again be among the heavy sellers in 1918.

There is evident throughout the trade a feeling of optimism. Early activity is looked for in the piece goods market, and one of the largest manufacturers in the city predicts great prosperity for the silk industry, not only during this Fall and next Spring but for at least two years to come.

SALES OF MILLINERY.

Hats and Trimmings Which Are Now Among the Best Sellers.

Millinery sales in the month of September showed a considerable increase over the corresponding month a year ago, according to the bulletin of the Retail Millinery Association of America. Especially was this true of stores in this and other large cities. The bulk of the business, however, was done in the first half of the month, when the weather was particularly Autumn-like. Most of the sales were made on trimmed, tailored and ready-to-wear hats, the movement of untrimmed hats showing unfavorably in comparison with sales of these goods in September, 1916.

The bulletin reflects reports from the wholesale market as to what will be "good" during October in this way:

"Narrow gros grains ribbons, principally black, and in widths ranging from No. 5 to No. 16, are reported to be the best selling items in trimmings of this kind. Various effects in fur ornaments continue good, as do tinsel and tinsel novelties. Beaded ornaments, in colors, are active sellers.

"As for shapes, smart little turbans of velvet, combined with fur, are good. Some are seen with chamois crowns. Large, hand-blocked velvet hats, with soft, draped crowns, some showing crowns of silk in the same colorings, are doing well especially in the form of pokes, sailors, and effects showing turned-up backs.

"Among the other good things are velvet or plush hats in the various fur colors, combined with electric blue, sapphire or silver and gold cloth. Velvet hats combined with beaver, and the reverse, have been selling well. The same is true of beaver hats combined with hatters' plush."

FOR PLAYER PIANOS.

School for Teaching Mechanics How to Take Care of Them.

Evening classes of the Danquard Player Action School, which is entirely supported by an association of industries whose sole motive is to spread information concerning player action mechanisms among persons who have to do with player pianos, will be resumed on Nov. 5. Tuition is free, and the course is open to all tuners, installers, and piano action regulators. Sessions will be held on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays from 7:15 to 9:15 P. M.

The purpose of the school is to offer those in the piano industry who have to deal with player pianos and their actions an opportunity to become fully acquainted with their maintenance and correction. About forty player actions, all of different makes, are used to give this instruction under the direction of competent teachers. It is also a purpose of the school to aid in the increasing of sales of player pianos, a branch of the industry which is admittedly held back by the difficulty experienced in obtaining men able to take care of these pianos after they have been sold.

Those attending the school, which is located at 609-611 West Fifty-first Street, must register at a fixed hour when they enter and leave. It is also required that they give their undivided attention to the work during the hours assigned for regular demonstrations, &c. Competent instructors are in charge during the regular hours of the day sessions, which run from 9 A. M. to noon, and from 1:30 to 4:30 P. M. Evening sessions are given at the hours indicated above. In addition to this, a correspondence department is maintained.

Before a student in the school is given a certificate of merit he must be able to repair in every manner each make of player action manufactured. The school is under the direction of Thomas Danquard, and George E. Martin is Principal.

Condition of Dutch Crops.

The condition of the Dutch crops, according to the rating as of Sept. 15th given by the Dutch Minister of Agriculture, is as follows: wheat 57; rye 65; barley 65; oats 56; and meadow grass 70, which last June was rated 47. These figures are made on the basis of 100 as excellent, 67 being taken as the average.

URGING SHOPPING EARLY IN THE DAY

Stores Deem This Advisable for Holiday Trade Because of Scarcity of Help.

There is talk of a movement about to be started by the local department stores urging not only early shopping, but shopping early in the day, during the fast-approaching holiday season. Though this is but one of many plans which the merchants are considering in connection with the holiday trade, they believe that none will do more to facilitate the handling of the rush of business which is expected to start in the course of the next few weeks.

Retailers have been complaining more and more as the season progressed, and as the help scarcity began to make itself felt, of the tendency of women practically to ignore the stores during the morning hours and to do the greater part of their shopping in the afternoon. It is said that, out of the total day's turnover in the stores, from 75 to 85 per cent. of the business is transacted between 2:30 and 5 o'clock. Thus, store managers point out, retailers are compelled to maintain a large force of help to take care of the rush hours during the afternoon, which is practically, if not entirely, idle during the morning.

"Preparation of unusual proportions," said the head of one of the stores, "must be made this year for the Christmas buying. The war is not going to figure in the least so far as curtailing business is concerned. What we must consider is that there is no unemployment, in addition to which wages, with but few exceptions, are high. This will result in what I believe will be an unprecedented rush of Christmas buying and, in view of the fact that labor is scarce, we are obliged to plan how to overcome the difficulties that will develop in taking care of this large volume of business when it comes.

"Therefore, since it is become impossible for us to get all the additional help we need, we are turning our attention to methods and means of using the help we have to better advantage. Though we have greatly increased the efficiency of our sales force by familiarizing them with certain fundamental principles of salesmanship and by assisting them to a better knowledge of the lines which they are to sell, we have by no means, through this practice, been able to offset the shortage of help. The only solution to the situation, as many of us in the trade see it, is in a more even distribution throughout the entire day of buying activity on the part of the public. Thus the idea was evolved to urge the people not only to do their Christmas shopping early, but to do it early in the day. And just as we obtained their hearty co-operation for years past, in not waiting until the last week before Christmas to do their shopping, so, I expect, will they help us in the present emergency when the situation has been pointed out to them and the urgent need for such co-operation on their part has been made clear."

"Such a consummation," points out the head of another one of the stores, "would accomplish as much toward remedying the situation as would result from an addition to our sales force, which under existing labor conditions seems practically impossible, as it would amount to 40 per cent. of its present strength. And, as I see it, one of the strongest points for this 'do your shopping early in the day' movement is the benefit that customers will derive from it. They would, by coming early, get much better attention from the salespeople, because of the absence of clamoring crowds impatient to be waited on, which frequently requires, though it is an undesirable practice, that the salesperson attend to two or more customers at the same time. They would have much better opportunity to make selections from a counter or table full of merchandise, and there would be a much better assortment from which to choose. There would, consequently, be a great many less unsatisfactory purchases made, and the returned goods evil would be correspondingly lessened. The savings resulting to the merchant would enable him to offer better values in many of his lines, and there again the customer would benefit."

In speaking of the economies which would undoubtedly accrue from a more even distribution of buying throughout the entire day, another authority in the trade says: "Matters of this kind, which would result in a saving to the merchant, whether they are suggestions from Washington or from our own trade organizations, inevitably are met in some quarters with varying degrees of skepticism. An example of this, with which we are all familiar, is the reception given in certain quarters to the 'carry your own package' movement, and the demand that a discount be given on all articles carried home. Manifestly, to those at all familiar with the problems of merchandising, such a discount is utterly impossible. But the point is that in introducing to the public these various and sometimes almost revolutionary plans born of these abnormal times it is necessary that the greatest care be exercised to avoid as much as possible regrettable misunderstandings. I think, in this respect, nothing needs greater emphasis than the fact that any economy or saving accomplished in merchandising, either by the co-operation of the public or by any other means, is forced through the inevitable laws of competition back into the pockets of the buying public. For instance, suppose that, through the co-operation of the women of this locality, buying in the stores is more evenly spread out over the entire day and a saving in the costs of merchandising is accomplished. The other stores will use the money thus saved to improve the quality of their offerings, and if I don't do the same my store will soon be deserted. Though none of us might be able to reduce the price, say, for instance, of a line of $3 waists, it would be possible for us to raise their standard of quality and workmanship."

In these days of ever increasing costs of doing business the stores feel they will have to depend more and more on the public's co-operation if prices of merchandise at retail are not to be very materially increased. And, in this respect, the New York merchants feel that they are particularly fortunate in having, as one department store head put it, "the most broad-minded and intelligent buying public in the country, whose co-operation always has been readily given in the past and whose response, I feel certain, to our latest appeal for shopping early in the day as well as in the season, will be as heartily made."

Velvet Popular in Bustle Gowns.

Demand in the local market for velvets and velveteens is reported by local manufacturers' agents as being very keen. Dress and suit manufacturers are said to be large purchasers, especially of the darker shades appropriate for street wear. One reason, it is said, for the increased market for these fabrics is their particular adaptability for dresses in the new bustle effect, which is the most striking feature of the Fall styles and which, in spite of adverse criticism and predictions to the contrary, is said to be meeting with a high degree of public favor.

BUSINESS NOTES.

The accounts of H. P. Wasson & Co. and of Efroymson & Wolf, both of Indianapolis, are now being handled in this market by Alfred Fantl, resident buyer, 116 West Thirty-second Street. The account of the Charles A. Kaufman Company, Limited, New Orleans, will be taken over by Mr. Fantl on Nov. 1.

The annual convention of the Associated Business Papers, Incorporated, will be held at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of this week. Sessions will be devoted to subjects of special interest to publishers, editors, and advertising men, and a dinner will be given at the hotel on Friday evening. The annual business session will be held on Saturday morning.

On Friday of this week the H. Herrmann Furniture Company of 368 and 370 Broome Street, the largest furniture manufacturers in the East, will round out [illegible] business life. The business [illegible] here by Henry Herrmann on [illegible]

Export License Applications.

It is not necessary, according to Mr. Condict of the Bureau of Export Licenses of the Export Administration Board, 11 Broadway, for exporters to purchase export license applications. "The Bureau," continues Mr. Condict, "endeavors to carry a sufficient stock of A-1, A-2 and A-3 application forms for the use of exporters, and for which there is no charge. If any exporter requires a large number of forms it may not always be possible to supply his entire needs, but at least a sufficient number for his immediate requirements could be given him." Mr. Condict wishes again to call to the attention of the exporters that forms A-1 and A-2 require but one copy, while form A-3 is to be made in duplicate.

Not Ready to Close Saturdays.

The suggestion put forth by some members of the Women's Neckwear Association of this city, that a uniform closing at 1 o'clock Saturdays be adopted by the trade, has not met, according to report, with universal approval. While the plan is proposed as a means of stopping the exodus of needle workers from this trade into other industries where Saturday afternoon work is not required, the feeling is held in certain quarters that this is a matter for each manufacturer to decide for himself. The question is to be further discussed at another meeting of the association, to be called in the near future.

British Silk Embargo Lifted.

Silk, and silk manufactures, both pure and mixed, will be admitted into the United Kingdom freely hereafter, according to reports from the American Consul General in London. Articles containing one-fourth silk by weight, it is stated, or wholly silk in weft or warp, will be treated as silk manufactures. Consignments will be licensed on receipt of shipping particulars.

No Parcel Post to Greece.

Parcel post service between this country and Greece will be discontinued until further notice. The action is taken because of existing conditions which prevent the smooth operation of the service. Postmasters have been notified to refuse to accept parcel post packages for mailing to Greek points until otherwise instructed.

Fellow Citizens:

We Are Americans by Choice

OUR Traditions, our Institutions, our Government are Sacred to us.

The Liberty we came here to enjoy is menaced by a foreign enemy. We can help preserve it by buying Liberty Bonds.

Your personal safety and that of posterity, your country's honor and humanity as a whole, depend upon the success of this LIBERTY BOND issue by the UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT.

In buying such a Bond, you are becoming a part owner of the United States.

These Bonds are secured:—

First. By one hundred and ten million people constituting the Government of the United States and all that these people as a Nation possess.

Second. They are an investment, safe, not speculative.

Third. They are an obligation of the United States, the strongest, the richest and most resourceful Nation on earth, and a mortgage on all it possesses.

Fourth. Every Bond has the same force and value as United States money.

Fifth. A Liberty Bond is in fact better than U. S. money, as it pays you 4% interest, while cash not invested earns nothing.

Sixth. If you cannot shoulder a musket yourself, let your money fight for liberty.

Seventh. Every dollar invested in a Liberty Bond is so much help to a successful termination of the war.

You can subscribe through your Bank, through your Society, through your Congregation or through your employer, wherever you are employed, either by paying cash or on the installment plan. One dollar a week pays for a $50.00 Bond — even the humblest worker can afford it. Every human being who earns money and who has money is to subscribe and to subscribe at once; the greater number of subscriptions the sooner the war will be over, as this will prove to the world that we are all behind our President and the Government. We all have to do our duty—some in the trenches, some in the factories and mines, and some at other work of assistance to our Government. The way you can serve best is to buy a LIBERTY BOND.

Our kinsmen abroad, whose homes have been ravaged, whose Institutions have been destroyed and who have been almost totally ruined by the inhuman attacks made by the greatest autocracy in all the world, are the victims of our common enemy. These men and women now look to the United States of America for freedom and protection and for the liberation of those countries which are now OUR ALLIES.

All nationalities of Europe are endangered by the ruthless autocracy that is our enemy.

We, the undersigned, know the terrible fate that is being meted out to our kinsmen abroad by the enemy that the United States Government is now fighting, and we appeal to you to subscribe to the utmost of your ability to

SUMMARY OF THE NEW PARIS FALL FASHIONS

Pencil Silhouette Decreed by Famous Dressmakers, Also High Collar, Long Sleeves, Short Skirt, and Soft Fabrics Like Velvet and Duvetyn

PARIS has accentuated the endeavor to make the human figure look like a lead pencil. The French corsets of this season are built as straight as a mediaeval cuirass.

The corselet effect, in truth, is the dominating feature of the majority of frocks. The First Empire waistline is brought in by many of the designers in three narrow girdles to mark the middle of the figure, but Jenny, Martial et Armand, Worth, and Bernard are not so economical in their girdles.

Afternoon gown in navy blue velvet, with embroidery in the same tone. The sleeves are the novel feature. By Jenny.

The Extra High Collar.

It is a bit difficult to know exactly what France has decided upon in the way of a proper neckline. She puts it forth as her decree that the collar shall be exceedingly high, but she has fashioned any number of gowns that do not follow this decree. On street suits the collars rise so high that they are called the "cache-nez," or nose-coverings. There is the new trench muffler, an apache cravat, and a postilion collar of the eighteenth century for the street; and for the house there are gowns that are buttoned to the chin, with the material "going over the top." Others have the loose handkerchief drapery, the fifteenth century Italian collar, and the conventional high, rolling collar that shows a bit of neck below the chin.

The Evening Decolletage.

The same inconsistency appears in evening gowns. France laid down the law that women were well-dressed in wartime when they wore high-necked gowns of transparent fabrics. America liked this idea; it was a change from all that had been in existence for two decades, yet after this question was thoroughly settled to the pleasure of everybody décolleté gowns are projected that do credit to the most daring dance clothes of peace times.

Even the conservative Jenny, who satisfies the American people season after season, turns out a barbaric thing of jet on black tulle, with a girdle of green velvet embroidered in gold that is made to serve as a bodice by the addition of a band of jet at the top. It slopes downward under the arms and over the back, and is supposed to be held on by a careless shoulderstrap of jet beads.

The Abbreviated Skirt.

A very few of the new skirts sweep the instep. The rest are frankly short. A woman is allowed all the license she wishes in this respect. Street suits have skirts that appear to be simply two breadths of material cut off at the hem to allow the fullest display of the highest boot made.

There is a strong feeling abroad for the elongated evening skirt. It does not appear in the Callot frocks, except in the Cathedral model, but smart women are insisting upon skirts that almost touch the toes in front. They are so narrow that they are easily wrinkled up over the ankles as the wearer moves.

The distinguishing feature in brilliant evening gowns is the gorgeous black panel. Sometimes it is fastened to the shoulders and sweeps the floor for a yard; again it is tucked up at the end of the spine, to suggest the Watteau drapery. It serves as the foundation for all the exaggeration of ornament that the French allow themselves this season. The lining is in a brilliant shade of velvet or satin, to contrast with the gown in front of it.

Panels, by the way, are dominating features of the new fashions. Jenny makes a gown of several panels hanging over Turkish trousers. They are held together at the waistline by a loose sash in another color.

There are few novelties in fabrics. Rodier's extraordinary duvetyn or velours de laine is the pronounced success of the season. Velvet, duvetyn, satin, and crêpe de chine rule among the ceremonial clothes; serge is used by every house; lace, metallic tissue, and fur hold their old place in the affection of the designers.

order to accentuate the lack of a waist. Even the jackets for street suits drop in straight lines from the shoulders to the hips, unless they, like some bodices on frocks, carry out the surplice effect.

The extraordinarily wide girdles of this season accentuate the Egyptian figure. Mme. Paquin, Lanvin, Cheruit, and Doeuillet are apt to use two or

An Extraordinary Sale of Rolled Gold-Plated Jewelry

Without doubt this is the best Jewelry offering we have made in years. A huge quantity—4498 pieces—but priced so low that it will be bought very quickly for gifts to be made now or put aside until Christmas.

The Jewelry is the best grade of heavy rolled gold plate, with a heavy thickness of gold rolled into the metal base, not dipped, and we are conservative in saying that it will last for ten years and really give better service than light-weight solid gold jewelry.

The Jewelry, in an endless number of pretty designs, is a stock clean-up of a North Attleboro manufacturer, who is conceded to be the best in his line. As is his custom, no attention has been paid to manufacturing costs for the sake of a quick disposal. In four groups, as follows:

35c., 50c. and 75c. Values
887 pieces of Scarf Pins, Cuff Pins and Tie Clasps.

$1.00 to $2.00 Values
at 45c. Pair
2,628 pairs of dumb-bell and loose link Cuff Buttons, engine turned, hand-engraved, plain and fancy die effects.

75c., $1.00 and $1.50 Values
630 pieces of Bar Pins, Brooches and Chatelaine Watch Pins.

$2, $2.50, $3.00 and $3.50 Values
at 95c.
163 pieces of Women's and Men's Lockets and Cigar Cutters.

$3.50, $4, $5 and $6.50 Values
at $1.85
240 pieces of Flexible Chain Bracelets and Joint and Catch Band Bracelets in various widths and styles, plain, engraved and jeweled. Street floor, Central Building.

$5.69 Oil Heaters—Now $4.19!

We consider this one of the most important announcements in the newspapers today, having in mind the price of coal and the reports of the difficulty to be experienced this Winter in the matter of deliveries. If the situation turns out to be as bad as many are predicting, then an Oil Heater is going to be a mighty comforting article to have about the house.

These Miller Oil Heaters Are To Be Sold Monday at $1.50 Less Than Their Regular Price

One of them will save you many a ton of coal. Very handy at times, especially before the main heating plant in the house has been started.

STRIKING PARIS CREATIONS FOR FALL

Callot Introduces Cathedral Gowns and Decollete Effects---Paquin Exploits Dyed Fur---Doucet Favors Plaits ---Redfern's Gorgeous Colors.

Paris.

CALLOT is still Callot. The statement is banal, but the truth in this case is not commonplace.

Every American dressmaker asks each season if Callot will remain true to form or make a departure. When the answer can be given that this house is turning out the same kind of clothes as heretofore one phase of possible trouble is wiped off the slate of fashion.

She has made a feature of a gown that might have been worn by one of Burne-Jones' saints or a saint in a cathedral window.

The fabric is velvet; the colors might have been taken from the stained glass windows of the destroyed cathedrals in Rheims and Flanders. They are suggestive of the clothes worn by Yvette Guilbert last Winter, when she arrayed herself in the rich, warm colors of sun-tinted colored glass as she recited.

There are rich green gowns from which float green and white sleeves; there is one blood red velvet gown that has a high, primitive waistline and long, angel sleeves that are slashed to show the under arm.

Then the Callot sisters use a seven-leagued boot to step from this cathedral gown to a daring décolleté that seemingly agrees with the French Government that the fabric of evening gowns should extend to the neck. They show it in a frock of black satin with flowing black tulle sleeves and a girdle that the Egyptian Amneris might have worn, made of black jet and finished with a medallion and deep fringe in front. The black tulle of the bodice rises to the neck, it is true, but it is unlined from the waist up. The sides are decorously built of black satin, it is true, but this unlined tulle showing the entire back gives one a shock. It is not easy to see how a woman could wear corsets with it.

The house of Callot also likes green. That is quite evident. A wrapped black satin gown that looks as if it were suggested by a flag that has wrapped itself around a pole has this bias movement of the fabric accentuated by a daring strap of green crystals going from shoulder to hips across the front of the body.

White or black tulle sleeves that sweep away into capes in the back are edged with fifteen inches of bright green tulle.

It is strange that the Callots did not have more Chinese embroidery on their clothes, because their Chinese action brought them an immense amount of trade this season. It is asserted that they made more money in selling furniture, porcelains, and embroideries than than they made in clothes. This extraordinary business that they did in objects of art for interior decoration was a startling adventure for them, and it made a sensational success.

With the Callot sisters turning their attention to interior decoration and Paul Poiret going in for the movies, from what source are we then to expect our daring, eccentric, and ultra-artistic clothes?

Paquin Exploits Dyed Fur.

Paris.

PAQUIN uses skunk, ermine, and wolverine as trimming. Some of the best creations are where the fur has been dyed to match the color of the gowns it garnishes. For instance, a steel-gray satin had rather wide bands of true, not a black, cuts was generously trimmed in lynx dyed dense black. One costume of heavy fabric had a swathed rolling collar of black and white lynx.

Sashes are popular at this establishment, the genre that lap about the figure and fall loosely, knotted in wool balls or in some kind of passementerie ornament. The silk tassel is employed when the gown is embroidered in floss, and the woolen one if the garnish be of that. Simplicity is the keynote of all effects, and everything is young. Soft-surfaced goods is the order for the day, and every bit of the fabrics used shows in the cut, for nothing in the way of a plait or a gather is concealed. Panels sometimes are as long as the skirt, but as the wearer moves these unfold and show the foundation.

Velour de laine is a favored tissue at this house, also duvetyn, and some gabardine. Satin for dress wear, tricotine de soie, and a velvet that closely resembles chiffon velour. One frock, noticeable in the collection, was of navy velvet trimmed handsomely in castor color. The dye is favored in the establishment, also that rich tone of yellow known as saffron. Combined with black, the ensemble is extremely attractive. Another combination seen here was purple and green. Hunter's green makes an effective, dressy tailored suit trimmed in lapin, dyed gray. A great deal of black satin is used, generally embroidered in color, and in the tones of yellow lead. A dye near Nattier blue made a very good tailored costume. A little one-piece robe of soft cloth, of that biscuit shade known as "beige," had trimmings of bright gold braid. The dress was a slip, loose enough to be moved at will.

A lace dress was composed of gray and beige heavy lace over black satin, and there was a draping of black Chantilly over the satin. Many lace creations are in this collection. Skirts are shoe-top length, they are narrow, and all have an air of comfort. The evening dresses have the picturesque irregular hem, and when there is a train it rests on the floor on one end, or in a point, and the point is almost sure to be dotted with a passementerie ball or tassel.

Doucet Likes Plaits.

AT Doucet's, skirt and waist effects are flatbacked, and the fullness in the way of plaits or gatherings falls at the side. Plaits there are a-plenty, knife pleats very straight. There were fewer of the robe chemises here, the effect of most of the dresses being that of a coat costume. There was a tight skirt, and over this long panels or else flying pieces sewed at the waistline that gave the idea of a long jacket over a snug skirt. At some of the houses the weight of a dress pulls everything down, since there are no longer hips to bear the burden, and the effect is fearfully straight. At Doucet's, however, the corsage or waist holds itself so closely against the figure that some idea of the form may be had, and the skirt takes care of itself.

Dresses button in front, at side, and in the back. The jumper genre is not favored. Big pearl buttons sometimes trimmed the tailored suits, and again the button was only a small one covered with cloth. The button, however, whether large or small, was of no importance here. Lace garnished some of the afternoon and evening frocks, the pattern Venetian, and the color cream. For materials, Doucet inclines to satin, georgette crêpe, soft cloth, velour de laine, and duvetyn, with a little coarse serge. On the latter were heavy touches of braid. Braid everywhere is so much admired that surely it will be employed more and more as the season advances, and will be fashionable in Paris all season.

Doucet employs little fur, and he does not care for lapin. Rather his taste goes to skunk, ermine, and fox. One of the dresses had a big collar of blue fox, a taupe satin frock it was, and the contrasted lights were fascinating. When fur is employed at all; it is the precious kind. He uses a little plaid in his combinations, soft red, green, yellow. He likes these dyes in costumes, too, though when composing a dress they are toned down almost to pastels. He has a strong feeling for buff, gray, and red, with an occassional caprice for apple or hunter's green.

Redfern Wraps Gowns on Figures.

THE linings for furs shown by Redfern are gorgeous as to color. Most of them are satin brocades. A yellow lining for a silver fox boa was there, a purple one for a nutria long coat, and a green one for a cape of wolverine.

Such linings seem to enhance the value of the pelt, and certainly the effect is dashing. Another long wrap was lined in plush made to duplicate tiger skin. Yet these very rich dyes do not in the least characterize the hues of dresses in the Redfern collection. They are navy and gray, tête de negres and dark red, black and white combinations.

Redfern uses more than a touch of embroidery when he uses it at all, and many of the best creations had no trimming save sashes or pieces of fabric. In a royal blue and dull-gray cloth suit the embroidery on the gray was of blue, accentuated with round blue beads. This cloth is known here as drap de satin, and in some lights it resembles velvet cloth more than anything else. Redfern uses charmeuse, too, but it is heavier than the charmeuse of yesteryear. Also, he uses crêpe de chine, velour de laine, serge, and gabardine.

Some of the afternoon and evening frocks seem to be made of a series of folds, and they wrap themselves prettily about the figure. Some are buttoned over the shoulder under one of the long plaits; some button in the back. Redfern likes the long collar that almost extends to the waistline in the back. This is usually of a contrasting color, and in a few instances the corners were finished in balls. Some other gowns showed a drapery about the shoulders in the nature of a hood—large or small, as the occasion demanded.

Redfern revels in the all-black gown, and some of those he showed had lace, or, if for evening, then jet or passementerie. He likes beige, and combines it with black, blue, and brown. Also, he uses that blue-gray dye known as steel in some of his most effective costumes. Skirts are narrow here, but with the drapery, or long lines of the overdress, the effect is that of a skirt of ample proportions.

WORTH---PREMET AND MARTIAL ET ARMAND

Paris.

WORTH is faithfully following the mandate of the French Government, that no costume may cover more than five meters of goods during the duration of the war.

Skirts are extremely narrow, and there is nothing lost in other parts of the dresses, and the fullness is obtained by the addition of fur and suspension of ropes of beads. We all thought that this idea o tightness in skirts was a whim of the couturier, and that to keep the wheels of trade turning he rung in this snug skirt. The cutters and designers, however, had to bow to the limitations laid down, and they have made a beauty of necessity.

Worth loves drapery, and he has it this season, too. Such clinging fabrics as jersey silk and wool, crêpe de chine, and tricotine beautify lines and make them appear more generous than they really are. So much for the art of the couturier. There were satins at Worth's, but they were mostly for dinner and evening gowns. For afternoon the above-named fabrics have first choice with him, and as the gowns are touched with silver or gold metal, they are very handsome. Skirts are short, much shorter than last Spring.

Premet Wraps Fabric on Figure.

THE drapery that recalls a mummy winding is a feature of the Premet display. Very graceful these skirts are, too, wrapped about the form, and they are quite original. The lower tier is tight, and when the same piece laps higher up it is looser, and if a third tier be employed, that is very full, indeed. The one-piece robes show the idea carried out all the way to the bust. Most of the dresses just fold about the figure and, after being winded to suit the fancy, they are fastened with tiny ribbons to hold them in place. Were effects tight this could not be accomplished, but styles call for looseness, and the frock that wraps or coils about the form is quite correct if just fastened negligently. Some of the pieces go over and under, some just cross only once.

To carry out the Oriental effect in the enveloping dress, such materials as fine serge, satin, duvetyn, velour de laine, cloth, and crêpe de chine are employed, though all are soft and clinging except, perhaps, the satin which, however, is far from being stiff.

Cheviot also is seen in some of the afternoon frocks. Not much embroidery is put on at Premet's, but a great deal of fur is, and it is the short-haired rabbit, dyed taupe, or brown or yellow or even bleached white, that rules.

The Important Collar.

OTTER and nutria are furs used lavishly by Martial et Armand.

The big collar is favored, and a greater number of coat suits are exhibited here than elsewhere. Nearly all the suits are garnished in fur, the skirts are short and scant in fullness, and the jacket is long enough to be a redingote. Marmot was the fur that trimmed one suit of hunter's green cloth. The afternoon frocks seemed often to be two-tiered, a tight skirt, with panels that fanned the figure as it moved. The skirts are often plaited, but the plaits open as the wearer moves, for although lines are long, none of them are stiff.

The collar plays an important part on tailored suits with Martial et Armand. It may be a flap of a scarf; it may be only the extension of the neck line, but no matter what the cut, the eye is attracted to the collar, and the effect is good.

One black cloth afternoon costume had no other garnish than a short vest of bleached rabbit and a scarf of the fur that formed a sort of stiff cravat and hung over the shoulder.

Jenny Makes Coat Gown---Lanvin Calls Her Famous Frock "Pershing."

Paris.

JENNY has a wonderful collection of new lingerie this year, and before the dress parade of models begins one inspects the flimsy finery in cases about the rooms. The keynote of the best lingerie is that it must be colored—pink, blue, gray, and a few articles in black. A pair of knickers of black satin tied with peachblow ribbon were featured. This maillot is to serve as a petticoat.

The material of the lingerie was batiste. There were chemises in mottled colored effects tied with ribbons, and some gowns and chemises had the upper part of pink, the lower of gray, and vice versa. There was nothing especially new about the shape of the pieces. The white ones had a garnish about the neck, a border to represent cretonne. This, as a matter of course, in colored anemones. With the price washwomen are charging and the difficulty one has to get linen laundered in Paris, one must content one's self with wearing lingerie a longer time than in extravagant days, and colored effects have been rung in to save the soapsuds.

There are fewer of the one-slip frocks at Jenny's than elsewhere. She has modified her robe chemise by annexing a long plaited tunic that makes it look like a coat suit. In fact, the garments are titled "coat dresses." The type is unusual and is nothing more than a tight underpart sewed under a rather full piece that might pass for an overskirt or the "limbs" of a coat.

She shows a small use of taffeta for afternoon, and the coat suits are lined with cloth. All goods, even satin, has a soft finish. Duvetyn, peau de pêche, and tricotine have velvety surfaces. Jenny still uses embroidery. She uses a great deal of nutria and lapin, and on some evening frocks was a narrow finish of ermine. One afternoon dress had the vest of it. Broadtail and cloth are splendidly built together in one tailored gown, a kind of 50-50 combination.

A novelty in jackets shows the upper part fastened and buttons then sewed on the outside from the waistline down. The immense enameled colored buckle, fastened in front, is a feature of Jenny's dresses. She leans toward neutral shades, and with her sashes are as popular as ever. The most popular gown is called "Macherie."

Lanvin's Pershing Gown.

THE dark note has crept into house clothes, for at Lanvin's the morning garments were red, gray, sand, pink, anything but white, and the boudoir cap followed suit in color. Indeed, a number of the caps were black, either lace or mousseline or tulle. Sometimes they were touched in gay color, but the grand chic seemed to have them all black.

All effects are girlish at Jeanne Lanvin's, and the keynote of the entire collection is quaint. Goods are so soft, too. Knitted jersey, as one new fabric is called, makes some delightful costumes. Satins are supple and soft, but they too lack filminess and every inch shows in costumes. Sleeves appear a trifle larger at this establishment than at some others, and skirts are less short and very narrow. The uneven hem is popular here and the broken line at the edge of a skirt is so artistic that there is no suggestion of anything save elegance.

Lanvin uses fur to rim some skirts, and she prefers broadtail or castor, yet uses black dyed lapin. The long colored vest does good work here, both for afternoon and morning tailored suits. To be stunning the vest must be of a strongly contrasting tone to the rest of the costume. Some of the houses employ the most brilliant dyes for their vests, and to tone down the otherwise crude result fur is liberally used at the neck.

Black and white combined is popular here, and other suits are of castor, brick, copper. One striking dress is a combination of sand and blue. In another instance brown sleeves are put in a black dress. That lovely shade of yellow known as oil composes one good afternoon satin frock. A novelty an evening dresses is the return of the berths. This is of Venetian lace, which, by the way, is modish. It is sewed on rather plain, to fall to the waist line. The color of the lace is a rich cream. Evening frocks for débutantes are generally round in the neck. For older women they are round, cut much lower and at the back little material is used above the shoulder blades. Her most popular model is called Pershing, built of gray velour and American blue, and her cowboy suit is of khaki-wool trimmed. Indian-wise, with fringe of itself.

DECREES BY ARBITERS OF DRESS

Lewis Shades the Eyes With Hats—Lucy et Gaby Partial to Deep Purples—Caroline Reboux Uses Half-Yard Quills.

Paris.

THE big hat is not noticeable at any of the leading millinery houses. Rather, the size is small and the type that fits flat on the head. When the hat is large it is either the Directoire shape, which is larger in front and at the sides than in the back, or it is three-cornered.

All the houses say they like the large hat, and believe that it may appear later in the season, but certainly there are no evidences that the unduly large shape will be worn in Paris, and when nothing points to a coming mode, ten to one the mode is dead or will remain dead.

All new headgear sent to spas and seaside is small and very light in weight. Women request the circumference to be small. The so-called "picture hat" will not be modish, but all headgear will be picturesque and will merit being made a portrait of. The old cry, "nothing new under the sun" is doubly demonstrated in the hat, and while there is nothing radically untried in the millinery line when one considers big things, there are novelties as to detail.

Lewis likes the hat that half covers the head, and he says that for women bordering on 50 nothing so enhances her good lines as the hat that protects the eyes, the brim coming well over the brow. In this way that part of the face is shaded a little and the eyes gain by not having a strong light upon them. Lewis likes this sort of a hat on general principles, too, and for that reason we see many of the bell shape in his collection. Black velvet has first choice there, and he uses a great deal of jet—not the heavy, thick motives, but chains and delicate ornaments of jet. His evening hats are mostly of black tulle with light touches of jet. Fur-crowned hats are there, too, one in kolinski and another in taupe. Also, he puts a good amount of tulle with fur, and nearly all his best headgear is in black. A black satin high-crowned hat with a tiny brim in velvet trimmed in skunk was garnished with a long black Chantilly veil to pass about the neck and fall over the shoulder.

There are no plumes at Lewis's, yet he uses the spirals in a most original manner. The only half-large hat of velvet was finished under the broad brim in plumes—so arranged to look like chenille. The spirals were stretched from centre of crown to edge of brim as a kind of lining, and the effect was soft and lovely. Another manner in which plumes are dressed at this place is to make them look like the défrisée, or, uncurled plume, in vogue years ago. spirals are selected. The plume is dipped in glycerine, the spirals combed evenly, then the feather is baked. The result is that the fronds remain in this shape. On one hat there were fully twenty of these queer-looking little plumes standing upright against the high crown. Most of the feathers are dyed black, but there was one touched in silver that was very effective.

Young girls' hats are in black velvet trimmed in turquoise or in cherry velvet. Some of the high brims are ornamented with pearl flowers, some in bits of velvet. All his hats are extremely simple, almost without ornament. It is the draping of velvet or fur, or the pose of the jet or plume that makes the happy result.

Strong Violet Used.

LUCY ET GABY use quantities of violet and deep purple velvet and tulle for hats. For afternoon they strongly lean to the tulle illusion hat either in black or in purple, and one is trimmed in itself, except, perhaps, with a finish of chenille or cabochon of jet. Black velvet is popular at this place, also panne, and in fur wild cat will be their novelty for Winter. The fur will be in its natural color, and either for morning or afternoon wear, the peltry will be appropriate, as headgear of it will be either for formal or informal functions.

The crowns of hats are no longer square, but are cut on the bias, and composed of four pieces, so the shape is domed. The Directoire is popular at this establishment, also the small black velvet draped high at one side, to be worn almost over the eye on the other. All the hats here have very high crowns; in fact, that is the one new note about them, but hair dressing has grown so steep over the face that the crown had to be elongated to suit matters, and the very high crown is the result. All the hats are light, however, for the frame is of wire. The bell form is much seen.

It began to look as if the Dolly Varden hats were on the way to Paris when hats grew so small and were traveling to the top of the chignon a few months ago; but the latest decree for hats is that they be worn lower on the head even than last season, so the Dolly Varden impulse is sidetracked.

Hats show the hair at the sides and in back, and frequently in front, but no effort is made to draw out the tresses; just enough must show to give color to the scheme. In veils the plain mesh and big dot at rare intervals are used at half a dozen leading milliners, and maybe that style will be fashionable. It is not particularly attractive, this big dot in chenille, but we have been trained to like the fine, plain kind, and no doubt as soon as well-dressed women begin to use the big dot over their faces and about the head the mode will spring into great popularity. All the dark veils are black or tête de nègre, and this latter shade is just as sought in Paris as it was when it first appeared. If a hat is not black it is sure to be "nègre."

Reboux's Felt Hats.

CAROLINE REBOUX prefers the soft felt for morning wear, a felt that is narrow of brim and very U. S. A., and high as to crown. The felt itself is like silk in softness. She likes black; also she shows a fancy for taupe, navy, and tête de nègre. But like the other great houses, the all black in velvet has preference for formal wear.

Reboux's shapes are neither large nor small, and there are fewer narrow brims there than at other houses. The big, high crown is there, and the hat must be worn low on the head. Reboux likes fur for crowns, and some of the best are of skunk and ermine with a long, straight quill standing in front. The aim of the milliners seems to be to make a woman just as tall as possible. No trimming hugs the hat and certainly nothing sits flat on it. Quills are fully half a yard long, and, perched on top of a high crown, they are going to make one something of a caricature, but it is smart now to be tall, the taller the better. So hats mean to do their level best in spinning out the inches of the beauty beneath them.

Long lines are sought, not only in dresses and hats, but even parasols are tightly folded and long, straight canes are carried by women, now that the long, straight hat has come, fashionables are going to appear more stretched out and elongated than ever. It used to be though that women were cut in two by wearing a short skirt, but nowadays, with the long lines at every turn, women seem taller than ever, and art is assisting nature in helping out the fashion.

Reboux trims black velvet hats with faille and grosgrain ribbon, the knot tied at the sides. A novel treatment of this ribbon is to add ermine tails here and there. She also uses these tails on tête de nègre velvets, and the effect is excellent. When feathers or quills are put on hats at this place, they stand straight up, no matter what the nature of the feather, but it is apt to be a fancy quill, or a défrisée plume, so ragged that only the very centre of the thing is much in evidence, and a glance at the hat leaves the impression that only some straight, black pin with a

Drecoll Favors Monkey Fur, Bernard Narrow Skirts --- Doeuillet Makes Irregular Hems.

Paris.

ALL the houses use less fur than last Winter, and Drecoll puts on peltry sparingly. The shaved rabbit is a favorite; rabbit that looks so fine and so rich that you would never accuse the fur of being so ordinary. A fondness for monkey fur is also noticed. The fur is black, and it is put on coats about the hem, on the immense collar, on sleeves.

The house or afternoon dresses have only the lightest touch of the monkey, yet one frock of cachmere crêpe de Chine—red, blue, brown—all those shades so soft in cachmere effects—was so generously trimmed in monkey that the effect was quite Indian. With quills in the hair the North American Indian would have been more than suggested.

A velvet teagown, royal blue, had a rim of monkey, and the gown was very attractive. Velvet is not a great favorite just now in this house, though just enough is used to keep it in the eye of the public.

The house strongly favors satin, and it is not a satin of yesteryear, but one of thick grain, called gros satin, sometimes double-sided, but the surface is not as smooth, or, rather, at a glance the eye notices that the grain is very thick and soft. Georgette crêpe is a favorite also, not only for plaited panels, sleeves and such, but for entire afternoon and evening frocks. As for jersey, if anything, it has gained in popularity. Not only is wool, but silk jersey and satin jersey are modish. The wool jersey is a trifle heavier than that of last Winter, and is called jersey de laine. All goods at Drecoll's are soft and velvety—velours de laine, duvetyn, heavy serge, and zibeline. Wool runs into embroidery, too, for some charming bits in the thickest threads trimmed bodices or were put on wraps. Less embroidery is used by this firm, and just now, instead of being put on cuffs, it generally goes high up on the sleeve, near enough the shoulder to almost run into it.

Dense blues, dark reds, bronze, black, for tailors, and these are also used for afternoon frocks, with the addition of bright red. Bright and dull gilt is much seen as garnish. The one-piece suit is here in all its virtue and looks so comfortable that it is a delight. Lines must be long, according to Drecoll, and while the dress follows the boundary of the figure, it must not flop.

Bernard Uses Wing Drapery.

BERNARD makes emphatic use of panels on skirts. One might say they are "winged" costumes, for, spreading a little as one moves, the wing idea is hinted. The panels are only at the sides, for backs are flat here as at most other houses. Whatever trimming goes on a skirt must be in front or at the side, for the back is left quite unadorned. Bernard delights in decorative plainings; not only in fine goods, but serge and satin also show the line of the machine, and thus the long, narrow line is reached. While the silhouette is not different from what it was a year ago, a small detail shows a change in fashion. The immense soft collar is one feature of the Autumn clothes on tailored, afternoon, sometimes evening frocks, and certainly coats. The apron front effect, gained in embroidery or braid, is a novelty.

Bernard adopts wide Hercules braid, making stars, diagonal corners—in fact, all kinds of figures. Bodices are swathed, and sometimes it is the Hercules that does the swathing. Much plaiting at this establishment is used, much black and white and dark blue is there through the gamut. Not only is the blue used for wool dresses, but satins are dyed to meet the Bernard demand—gaberdine, tricotine, serge, cloth, velours de laine, and peau de pêche. His all-black satins are admirable. Taupe is an old favorite of this house, also brick, and the colors are used well in all kinds of suits.

Doeuillet's Narrow Skirts.

DOEUILLET shows any number of tailored suits with long jackets, the latter spreading somewhat about the edge. He likes the sailor collar on such suits, also the creased, soft collar, and the scarf. Immense bone buttons, or those of the goods, trim the jackets.

The coats are half a yard longer than they were in the Spring. The high, soft waist effect is sought here. The skirt is about the length it was before the opening of the new season, and is, perhaps, three-quarters of a yard narrower, and that is a good deal to take from even a wide skirt. From a front or side view one would scarcely notice the difference. It is the back of a skirt that is narrow, for all the fullness has evidently been taken from here and pushed elsewhere. At Doeuillet's, the backs are flat, yet enough goods is employed to make a comfortable picture.

While hems of some skirts are regular, many are composed of panels in lengths. Very chic, that, and as the skirts are more or less narrow, this unevenness can be tolerated. Doeuillet plaits his skirts, so the long line is there. He uses serge, jersey, heavy wool materials, satins, crêpe de Chine, and fur as trimming, and as much as possible of the latter is used on the skirt. One

Cheruit Has Longer Skirts; Bulloz Uses Persian and Japanese Embroidery.

Paris.

THE uses to which lapin is put show great talent, not for the furrier, but for the couturier. The pelt is nothing but rabbit, but it is handled skillfully in that it is dyed and then the surface is cut. It is especially the latter that counts, and as rabbit exists today, it is really a most luxurious and useful fur.

It arrived in all its glory a year ago and such quantities of skins were employed that the general impression was that the lapin would hardly live through the Winter. Yet it not only survived other peltry last year, but it is riding on the crest of the wave this season. Cheruit applies the fur knowingly, and some of the handsomest creations at this house are finished with it. In fact, all the fashion leaders turn to the once despised skin for ornamentation.

Skirts are cut a trifle longer by Cheruit and they do not appear so narrow as at other places. The line here is straight, while elsewhere the lines are wider about the hips, narrowing as they reach the hem.

This was the silhouette six months ago, and no doubt certain designers have kept to it. Each skirt last Spring was decorated with bagging pockets at each side. These pockets have quite disappeared, the hips are plain. In tailored suits some sort of a panel covers the skirt proper, but for afternoon and evening frocks no apology is given the absence of decoration, and the skirt is plainer than ever.

Cheruit uses embroidery sparingly, and it may be floss or coarse wool, and designs are small, not large; that is to say, the design only forms a part of the dress and is not large enough to call to the eye instantly.

Cheruit uses all black in suits, in afternoon and evening clothes, and also suits black with color. Colors here are not garish. They are soft and undecided. Taupe and black, sand and black, navy and black, that neutral tone of red known as "dregs of wine" and black combinations are charming. Sometimes these colored foundations are touched in heavy black braid or black fur, and in such cases the ensemble of the costume is black.

Bulloz and His Buttons.

The looped skirt is the feature in Bulloz's gowns, and his skirts are narrow. Some embroidery is put on corsages, and most of it recalls the Persian and Japanese. In fact, Bulloz has several wraps that are almost duplicates of the vast, roomy kimono worn by the Japanese gentleman when he goes "en promenade." The blues, reds, yellows, and browns beloved of the Orient are strong in the collection, mostly in satin, though Georgette crepe is also preferred. Bulloz daringly combines black satin with green velvet in a stunning afternoon costume. He likes soft fabrics, and for that reason velours de laine is a favorite. Narrow, narrow panels are put on some skirts, but the loop idea dominates with this couturier.

The vest is much employed by Bulloz, and it is in colored or plain panne, or satin. Dresses appear mysterious, for one cannot find a place where they might fasten. What increases the problem is that Bulloz uses shoulder drapery often—that is, pieces hang from there when the frock is for the evening. However, one has to be initiated into the secrets of these new dresses, and when one discovers that most of them fasten simply over the shoulder and under the arm the rest is easy.

While black alone forms some costumes, there are pastel shades and those of non-commital tones. Brick is favored, also tête de nègre, and oil. For evening Bulloz makes parts of his best garments of flesh-colored Georgette. The only color on one of these flesh frocks of mousseline was a band of big red roses about the head of the ruffle, and another flesh frock had a broad band of black fur around the waist. He uses bengaline de soie occasionally for evening gowns, and he uses much tulle. He puts dull gold or silver braid to help out colors that are too pastel if left alone.

Braid is a great favorite at the Bulloz establishment, and it is the wide, flat, silk genre that appears best when a great deal is employed. It does not

EVENING CLOTHES ARE NOW SIMPLER

Materials Are Handsome, But There Is a Great Contrast From Last Year, When Costumes Were Strikingly Elaborate.

THERE is one decided change in the evening clothes of the season which is upon us. They have sobered down to a remarkable degree. Last season everything was strikingly elaborate. Our senses were stunned with the gorgeousness of the clothes that were sent us by Paris and designed here in our own country. But this year, the more openings we see, the more we realize that the craze for simplicity has worked itself out. Do not think for a moment that the materials are not handsome. They are extremely so, but they are used sparingly and humbly as though the women would not flaunt their handsomeness before the public gaze. It is as though we remarked in unison, "We must be gorgeously gowned but we will do it quietly this time." And therein lies the secret of the good taste of most of the Winter things. They are elegant in their modesty. They are noticeable for their aristocratic bearing.

Just now there is an abundance of clothes to be seen upon the stage, for one play after another is opening in which there are really beautiful and well-chosen gowns. Even though the play be disappointing, if the gowns are worth while, what woman does not consider herself paid for the time spent? And the stage is the place to show off good gowns to their best advantage—the setting is usually right.

The audience at a well-dressed play seems inspired. It dresses up to the standard set, particularly at a first night. At the initial performance of "Misalliance" one looked to the stage in vain for any display of up-to-the-minute gowns for the simple reason that this was the portrayal of the Shavian life of an unpretentious English family. Smart gowns would have been quite out of the picture. But in the audience were actors and actresses upon whom bloomed a profusion of new and lovely evening things. Julie Opp, wife of Mr. Faversham, wore a lovely evening coat made of folds and folds of majenta velvet that wrapped about her like a regal robe. It was trimmed with generous pieces of black fur for collar and cuffs. About her forehead and reaching in a band around her shining black hair was a jeweled ornament of emeralds, and the long, graceful earrings matched.

Mary Garden's gown carried out this simplicity idea. It was of black silk net and jet, and the jet trimming running in a line from the waist over the shoulders and shimmering against her white skin was a spangled frame for the golden head above. Julia Dean was gowned in a simple thing of pink taffeta all puffed and pert in just the right places. Ruth Chatterton was in white net made with interesting rows of frills and pleated flounces. Jane Houston was gowned in a draped affair of rose and gold brocade with flowing, graceful sleeves of rose silk net, over which she had a peacock green velvet coat all becomingly collared with soft brown fox fur.

It does seem as though things evening turn upon the point of draping with a vengeance. There is scarcely a notable dress gown to be seen that is not wrapped about the figure in one way or another. And in this manner a mere strip of handsome material can be made to do duty, showing every inch of its brilliance and design. It drapes for a portion of the way and meets a partner of some simpler material which drapes for the rest of the way. Economy strips they are called in some places by some people, and it is expressive, for a small strip of a lovely fabric is all that is needed to make a successful gown, provided it be combined with its complementary color in chiffon or silk net or even silk or satin. This idea is attune with the plea of the Government to save in all ways.

A gown of this sort had a strip of gold-and-black brocade draped over the right shoulder and the left hip. Then the rest of the skirt was done in black satin while the remaining portion of the bodice was filled out with black silk net. That was positively all there was to it—not a trace of trimming to be seen—but the gown was stunning in its grace of form and line.

The velvet dinner gowns done in this draped fashion are the loveliest things of the season. In the first place they are colorful. The one thing that strikes your attention is the wonderful choice of pure color. Then they are draped so simply and with such careful attention to the lines of the figure that they charm by very reason of their suitability. Sometimes they are draped in Empire fashion, and again the effect is of the long-waisted moyen age period. Many are held in to the figure at the waistline, falling in straight folds to the ground, while others stand out about the hips in ample folds to simulate bustle or barrel effects.

A velvet gown of geranium red was draped tightly as to skirt and rather easily as to bodice, with never an enemy material to relieve it and only insignificant net sleeves as an excuse for any sleeves at all. The neck line was cut off squarely at both front and back, and the whole effect was wonderful in its soft severity.

Black velvet gowns and those made from dark, midnight-blue velvet were never better for evening wear. Jet and spangles are used with them in homeopathic doses, and never by any chance is a contrasting color allowed to enter upon the scene. They hold throughout the distinctness of their originally chosen color.

A metal brocaded velvet gown in a French collection is worthy of more than a slight description, but it was something on the order of these draped things. The silver and black brocaded skirt was held loosely in rich, deep folds and the bodice was simply a wide strip of cloth of silver folded straight across the figure. From the waistline in the back a panel train fell straight to the ground, ending squarely cut off at the bottom.

"Saturday Till Monday" was a first night with real gowns both on and off the stage, those on, being truly beautiful. They were designed by artists and worn by wonderful beings who fitted them to perfection. Miss Mayeliff's wardrobe from start to finish was a dream, and the other dresses in the cast lived up bravely to the standard set by hers. Her first appearance was in a gray silk crêpe afternoon dress made as long and as straight and as simple in character as she herself was made. The skirt was just gathered at the waist, falling straight and very nearly touching the ground. There was a soft crushed gray sash with hunky bobbing tassels also of gray. The simple rolled collar was made of the same shade of gray in satin and striped crosswise at intervals with narrowish rows of vermilion braid. The square low cut vest was the pièce de résistance—of Chinese blue, and the feathers on her smart little upturned hat were dyed the very same shade. All that on top of a blonde complexion and blonde hair is worth seeing.

Her gown in the second act was chocolate brown gloveskin cloth with just a suggestion of a bustle. Its stiff, spreading collar, along with the Russian looking hat and the bag that went with it, were all made of a wonderful modernist printed silk colored predominantly red and black.

And, when a chance for an evening frock came along, her appearance outdid all previous ones. It was so pure and sweet without losing one atom of smartness, and it was fashioned from white silk net with silver lace. The skirt was made with an all around tunic, both layers being edged with this wide silver embroidered lace. And the bodice had a sort of a cape collar of the lace at the back, which reached the waist and fastened to the sleeves in a fascinating way. The color came in at the waist where a narrow sash of robin's egg blue dropped off at the side ending in two gorgeous silver tassels. Over all of this she wore, when she came in out of the dew, a blue chiffon cape coat wrap edged with softly becoming white fur. Never was there an ingénue evening gown so intelligently got together.

As an idea for an evening gown for an older woman that of the one who played the mother in this piece was an excellent example. It was made of open mesh black silk lace and black silk net, the skirt being hung in straight panels over white satin, the bodice draped becomingly in the same manner. The sleeves were of flowing black net as are so many of the evening sleeves this Winter.

If there is one corner of fashion where women will be extravagant, it is where evening coats hold sway. Never before have there been so many and numerous sumptuous wraps displayed and worn. Going in and out of the smart restaurants are perfect swarms of velvet and fur and brocaded coats that are warm enough for blizzard weather and beautiful enough to grace the most ravishing gown and the most good looking woman. Only a glimpse of a head appears from the confines of the fur at the throat and there is only space enough at the bottom for two tiny brocaded toes to appear.

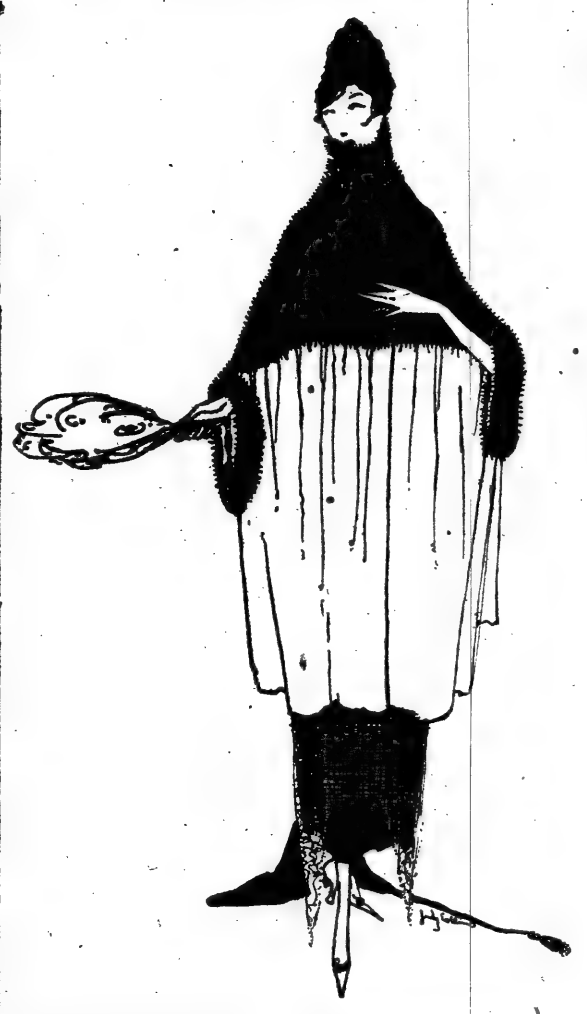
The ermine wrap is seen oftener than would seem possible. One could not believe that there were so many thousands of dollars in the whole world. A conspicuous one was made in the form of a cape with no places for the arms to come through into the evening air. It had a huge cape collar wrapped in great folds about the neck and the only ray of relief from the all pervading white was the row of tiny black tails all round the base of the collar.

Sable coats are by far the most expensive of the season and sable is having a tremendous vogue just now. One such had the temerity to show quite full sleeves gathered into a tight narrow cuff. That one also had a large round collar, made in the nature of a coachman's collar, covering everything in sight but the top of a well dressed head.

Coming down to earth in the matter of evening coats, one of satin was glimpsed in the crush of an imported collection. Satin didn't look extra warm to be sure, but an examination showed a wonderful lining of champagne colored velvet. Now can you imagine anything more topsy-turvy than that? Yet why not have the warmth on the inside where it is about to do its utmost of good? There were signs of warmth on the outside of this coat, too, in the shape of a high enfolding collar of black sealskin and deep spreading cuffs of the same fur. There was a black satin cape made on this same general principle. The trimming was moleskin in strips this time and the cut of the cape gave a pinched though full appearance. That is, it had a lot of stuff, but it was fitted in to the shoulders and the ankles and puffed out in spots in between. A little gathered shoulder cape added to its quaint, old fashioned appearance.

A gold brocaded cape—brocade of metallized satin—was lined with cerise velvet and the lining was folded at the edge in some way so that a fold of the bright color appeared here and there. This cape was draped with a cape over a cape, as it were; that is, a long cape rather scant in material folded round the figure and a shorter, fuller one draped over it, reaching only to the waistline. This was a lovely and a very new idea.

The important question of what the quite young lady will wear in the evening must not be neglected. She is hardly well enough along to be draped. But Paris and the new mode provide for her needs with even more fervor than for the older women. She is such a satisfactory proposition to dress up. An ingénue gown from Paris was made of wide strips of soft pink satin ribbon falling over pink net from the waist to the hem of the skirt. These strips flopped about carelessly in the breeze and were fringed in a studiedly careless way instead of being hemmed. The net underslip has a blue conventional flower sprinkled here and there just by way of relieving the deadly monotony.



Evening coat with Victorian drooping yoke of seal. The rest is emerald green chiffon velvet.

MEDICAL OFFICERS MADE IN 3 MONTHS

Training Schools Show Possibility of Giving Civilian Physicians Knowledge Required for Military Service.

By Major C. S. WILLIAMSON, U. S. R., Professor of Clinical Medicine, University o Illinois.

SUFFICIENT time has elapsed since the training schools for medical officers were put into active operation to judge whether anticipated results have been achieved. The raison d'être of the schools lay in the following considerations: The medical officer in the army occupies a position different from that of his civilian confrère, in that he must assume responsibility of a large amount of administrative work, which must be done along lines identical with those used by the rest of the army.

A member of the Medical Officers' Reserve Corps, transplanted to active duty in the army, must be familiar with the organization of the army, its rules of procedure, its system for placing responsibility, its relation to the civil authorities, and, lastly, with that unwritten code known as the customs of the service. Further, he must know accurately the relation of the medical department to the line officer in order that his duties may effectively be performed. Now, these things, while less formidable to learn than the professional knowledge that the physician has already acquired, nevertheless require study, drill, and practical application. The training camps have been instituted to instill this knowledge. Starting with the assumption that the physician is familiar with the practical aspects of medicine and surgery, the three months of intensive training supplies the thing lacking to develop him into a competent army medical officer.

One of the difficult things to acquire is the army viewpoint. If a civilian physician were to have suddenly thrust upon him a group of wounded men of whom one or two had severe penetrating abdominal injuries and the rest only slight cuts, what would he do? First, he would care for the severely wounded men by getting them to a hospital and possibly operating upon both at once. He would leave the slightly wounded to shift for themselves, if need be. The army medical officer after an engagement evacuates them all, unless the injury is such that a soldier should not be immediately transported. If he must make choice between the very severely wounded and the less so, the army medical officer gives preference to the latter. This is due to the fact that his primary duty is to keep the number of the effectives up to the highest possible point. Humanitarian considerations come second. This probably sounds shocking to the average layman, but war at best is shocking.

The army medical officer is primarily a sanitarian. The layman is apt to think of such a man of higher rank as performing numbers of major operations and seeing numerous sick men, whereas a division surgeon is more concerned with the problems of preventive medicine and sanitation than with the technique of taking off a leg. Junior officers do most of the strictly professional work.

It is so important to have the sanitary end of the problem properly done that each division has a special medical officer, normally a Lieutenant Colonel, who functionates solely as a sanitary inspector of that division. It is his duty to advise the division surgeon, and through him the Commanding General, concerning sanitary measures for the health of the troops. So long as the health of the troops is normal the operation of the sanitary service is practically unnoticed. Army sanitation is a difficult task at best.

When one remembers that in the field only the most limited supplies are available, and that the camp has often to be made in poor surroundings; furthermore, that the soldier is subjected not only to the physical and psychical strain of marching and fighting, but to inclemencies of the weather, it may be understood that sanitary problems are of first magnitude.

Questions involved in these problems are explained in the course taught at the training camp. A civilian physician of good training can effectively take up the duties of an army medical officer after attending such a school. Some physicians, by virtue of a highly specialistic training, are adapted for hospital work and will, of course, be used in such capacity.

It may interest the lay reader to know just what the medical officer is taught in the training camps. First, he learns what every officer in the army must know, i. e., the general plan of organization of the army, the necessary portions of the drill manual, army regulations, which form a sort of organic law of the army, the special regulations, which fill a fair-sized volume relating to the Medical Department, and so on. The medical officer must drill his own sanitary troops. Army regulations deal with all sorts of things too numerous to mention in detail, but in general having to do with the fundamental method of procedure in army matters. One chapter may deal with ceremonies as part of a review, a funeral, the visit of a foreign dignitary, or courtesies proper to exchange between officers of different services. Another tells in detail how to go about getting supplies, how to take care of them and to account for them if lost, damaged, stolen, or used up. Another discusses the difficult questions of responsibility and accountability, for it is evident that some individual must be held accountable for property intrusted to his keeping.

The drills must be learned by the prosaic method of doing them oneself, for nowhere is it truer than in the army that one is not fitted to command who cannot obey. This exercise is also a good way for the newly arrived physician to get himself into better physical condition. The majority of those physicians who have come to us have found outdoor work strenuous at first. Most of them soon become accustomed to it and say they have not been in such good condition for years.

The obese often lose from fifteen to twenty-five pounds; the thin register substantial gains.

The average age of medical officers is well over 35. At this time of life men are generally settled in their habits, and, however willing they may be to comply, it is a matter of some difficulty for them to readjust themselves overnight. To put the matter concretely, to a man who has been accustomed to get up when he liked, go to bed when he liked, and dress as he liked, it is disconcerting to be awakened at 5:15 and be fully dressed and in line at 5:30. It means springing out of bed promptly and getting busy—very busy. To be in bed with the lights out at 10 is not so hard, for he is generally dog tired. To be inspected minutely, as the officer later will inspect his personnel, is a fine object lesson, but it comes a bit hard at first.

One might suppose that the question of submitting to superior authority would be the most difficult of all, but results have surpassed our expectations. It was soon found that officers who had attained real prominence in the medical world were most ready to get into the spirit of military life. An energetic officer of 30 or 35 who shows a distinct capacity for administrative work and can command men may be put in with a regiment either as a senior or junior officer, according to his ability. Another may be given charge of an ambulance company or a field hospital. It has often happened that two or three attempts are necessary to find the best place for a man. Some have been teachers in medical colleges, and range from department heads in large universities to junior assistant, and such have been largely utilized as instructors.

The health of the army is, in general terms, more dependent on sanitary inspectors than on any other single group. They occupy positions calling for tact, for theirs is the necessary but unpleasant duty of calling attention to defects in sanitation of various organizations, and to insist on prompt and effectual correction. The importance of this work is probably imperfectly realized, but to use the words of a distinguished authority, "If camp diseases can be controlled and prevented, it is evident that during a campaign good sanitation will save more lives than the most perfect surgery." To acquire the special training necessary to do this work efficiently all student officers receive instruction, both theoretical and practical, along these lines, and those men who show a special proficiency are assigned to this branch.

GREENHUT'S "THE BIG STORE" Meet me at the Fountain
SIXTH AVE. 18TH TO 19TH STREET

"The Big Store" Is Twenty-One!

It has lived through the most memorable youth in world history. It has lived on more revolutionary ideas and events than the century witnessed. It came into being when enterprise was giving conservatism the last telling wallops.

Greenhut's Is the Young Retail Giant!

Since its birth no establishment has gained equal prominence or grown to equal size. We have held our own against old and new leaders. We have steadfastly held the confidence of New York's purse. We have held our location and maintained progress against the sternest economic changes retailing ever contended with. We stand alone in the heart of yesterday's foremost shopping center—because this store WAS its heart—the vital force that kept it crowded and now holds the crowds it brought. We broke a hundred precedents and traditions when we opened our doors.

We introduced broader, fairer relations between buyer and seller; we gave Manhattan mercantile innovations that are today standard throughout the United States; we have endured to successful maturity in faith under adverse conditions that meanwhile drove a dozen important establishments out of existence or to new sites,—Because Greenhut's made customers when it made sales,—because it has all along given so much bigger value to the dollar and wrapped so many extra forms of service in every bundle that no combination of circumstances can wean its loyal patrons from every confidence and faith.

No wonder we want to hold a party—a real party—A BARGAIN PARTY—TO CELEBRATE THIS ANNIVERSARY. No wonder every department under the roof has been gathering special lots and scratching profits off the price tickets. No bands of music—no moving pictures—no style promenades. They are not thrilling enough for such an occasion. Instead, we have captured the high cost of living. Run down and see the monster in captivity—thrashed and tamed by the price reductions of "THE BIG STORE'S TWENTY-FIRST ANNIVERSARY."

Bedroom Chairs and Rockers

This remarkable transaction comes just in time for our Anniversary Sale, which begins tomorrow.

The Selling Prices Are Less Than Manufacturer's Wholesale Prices Today.

All the chairs are in excellent new styles and substantially constructed;—choice of various finishes.

Considered from every standpoint, this is, in our opinion, one of the greatest sales that any Furniture Store has been able to announce in three years—in other words, since the beginning of the war.

EVERY PIECE OF THIS FURNITURE IS HIGH-CLASS.

Every price is extraordinarily low: Of some chairs and rockers we have quantities, of others only a limited number, and therefore we advise early selection.

HOW TO DETERMINE RANK IN THE NAVY

Sleeve Stripes Show Positions and Colors Indicate Arm of Service—Insignia Also Employed.

THE stripes on the sleeves of an officer of the United States Army indicate the rank of that officer in the service, while the colors between the stripes show the arm of the service of which he is a member. In the case of warrant officers the arm is indicated by the insignia worn on the collar.

The service uniform of all commissioned officers of the navy is of dark navy blue cloth or serge, except in Summer, when white uniforms may also be worn. The stripes worn on the sleeves, and which indicate the rank of the wearer, are as follows:

An Admiral of the navy—there is no officer now in the service of that rank—wears on his sleeve two stripes of two-inch gold lace, with one stripe, one inch wide, between them, the stripes being set one-fourth of an inch apart.

An Admiral, the rank held by American fleet commanders and the chief of operations in the Navy Department, wears one two-inch stripe with three stripes of one-half-inch lace above, the stripes set one-fourth of an inch apart.

A Vice Admiral displays on his sleeve one two-inch stripe with two stripes of one-inch lace above it, the stripes being separated the same as in the case of the flag officers of higher rank, while the Rear Admiral is indicated by one stripe of two-inch lace, with one stripe of one-half-inch lace above it. The Commodore wears a single two-inch stripe.

Four stripes of one-half-inch lace, set one-fourth of an inch apart, designates the Captain, while three stripes similarly placed indicates the officer whose rank is that of Commander.

The Lieutenant Commander wears two stripes of one-half-inch lace, with a stripe one-fourth of an inch between, while a Lieutenant displays two one-half-inch stripes. The Junior Lieutenant's rank is indicated by one stripe of one-half-inch lace with a stripe one-fourth of an inch wide above it. A single one-half-inch stripe designates the Ensign.

The color separating the stripes, which indicates an officer of the medical service, is dark maroon; that of the pay officers is white, of naval constructors dark violet, of civil engineers light blue, medical reserve crimson, and dental corps orange. The line officer is indicated by the fact that no special color separates the stripes, which are in his case sewn to the cloth of the uniform. Line officers also wear a star of five rays embroidered in gold on the outside of each sleeve midway between the seams.

The collar insignia of an Admiral of the navy is four silver stars of five rays each, the two end stars surcharged upon gold foul anchors, the crowns of the anchors pointing toward each other. The insignia of the Admiral is the same as that of the Admiral of the navy, with the exception that only one anchor is displayed. The Vice Admiral wears three stars and a silver anchor in place of the gold anchor, surcharged with a star, which is worn by the officers of higher flag rank.

Two silver stars and a silver foul anchor in rear of the stars designate the Rear Admiral, while the insignia of the Commodore is the same with the exception that there is only one star. A silver spread eagle and a silver anchor are the insignia of a Captain, while that of the Commander is a silver oak leaf and a silver foul anchor. A gold oak leaf and a silver anchor designate the Lieutenant Commander, while two silver bars and a silver anchor are the insignia of the Lieutenant. One silver bar and a silver anchor are the insignia of the Junior Lieutenant, while the lone silver anchor indicates the Ensign.

The way to tell a chief warrant officer is as follows:

Two crossed foul anchors, embroidered in silver, and surcharged at point of crossing with a gold five-pointed star, designate the chief boatswain, while a flaming spherical shell, embroidered in silver, with the flame horizontal and pointing to the rear, surcharged at the centre of the shell with a gold star is the insignia of the chief gunner.

A three-bladed propeller standing one inch high, embroidered in silver, with one blade pointing direct toward the neck edge of the collar, and surcharged at the centre with the gold star, shows that the wearer is a chief machinist, while a carpenter's square, embroidered in gold, is the insignia of the chief carpenter.

A diamond, with its long axis parallel to the neck edge of the collar, designates the chief sailmaker, a caduceus in silver the chief pharmacist, while the pay corps leaf embroidered in gold indicates the chief pay clerk. Boatswains, gunners, machinists, carpenters, sailmakers, and pharmacists wear the same insignia as the chief warrant officers of those arms, with the exception that the insignias are embroidered in gold instead of silver.

The insignia which indicates the United States marine is famous the world over. It is the earth surcharged on an anchor, the whole topped with the American eagle. This is perhaps the most striking insignia of all the American fighting services.

MAKES PLEA FOR AID FOR FRENCH INFANTS

Mrs. Rutherford Stuyvesant Speaks for American Committee of the Charite Maternelle.

MRS. RUTHERFORD STUYVESANT, Chairman of the American Committee of the Charité Maternelle de Paris, has issued on behalf of that French charity, which is one of the oldest in the world and the first President of which was Queen Marie Antoinette, an appeal for aid for the infant children under the care of the organization. Mrs. Stuyvesant says that "no appeal can be too large, none can be too small for the great endeavor of building the new generation on which will fall after the greatest war of history the task of a renaissance of the world."

"Of all the perils which menace France," Mrs. Stuyvesant says, "depopulation is one of the most imminent. The following statistics will show the actual facts of the situation compared with that of the United States. The birth rate of 1916 in France is estimated by the French authorities as only 8 per 1,000, and at the same time the death rate has undoubtedly increased, and is over 20 per 1,000, quite aside from the deaths occurring from military operations."

It is pointed out that in 1914 the population of France was 39,500,000, and that at the beginning of the war the excess of births over deaths was about 50,000 annually. In 1916 the deaths in the civilian population totaled 700,000, and in the military forces 400,000, a total of 1,100,000. The number of births in France in 1916 was 312,000, or 788,000 fewer than the number of deaths. For purposes of comparing conditions in this country with those in France it is pointed out that in New York State the birth rate is 24 per 1,000, and the death rate 14 in each 1,000.

The Charité Maternelle which is caring for so many French infants was founded about 1784, the object of the society being the adoption of the children of the poor at birth and during the first year of their infancy, together with direct supervision of their care in the homes of their parents by the women administrators of the society who bring into the homes spiritual aid as well as physical care and comfort.

"Since 1784," Mrs. Stuyvesant says, "the society has been endowed and praised by the French Government for its efficient work. In 1914 there were 20,000 men who enlisted at the first call of the flag who were children of the Charité Maternelle, the society having cared for them in their infancy. Since the war, the women of the society, assisted by sisters of charity, have redoubled their efforts and given themselves devotedly to the work, saving thousands of little children from death and tuberculosis."

The President of the French Committee is the Duchess of Mouchy, the Vice Presidents being the Duchess of Trevise, Mme. Henri Schneider, Mme. Armand Evette, and the Marquise de Noailles. The administrators include more than a score of the most prominent women in France, among them the Princess Murat, Countess de Bearn, the Duchess of Guiche, Baroness Lejeune, and the Princess of Poix.

The members of the American Committee are Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, Mrs. Frederick Allen, Mrs. Vincent Astor, Mrs. Robert Bacon, Mrs. Edmund L. Baylies, Mrs. Winthrop Chanler, Mrs. John Jay Chapman, Mrs. James B. Duke, Mrs. Henry Clews, Mrs. Marshall Field, 3d, Mrs. F. Gray Griswold, Mrs. Peter Cooper Hewitt, Mrs. Charles Marshall, Mrs. Ogden Mills, Mrs. Stanley Mortimer, Mrs. Francis K. Pendleton, Mrs. William Douglas Sloane, Mrs. William Payne Thompson, Mrs. Frederick W. Vanderbilt, Mrs. M. Orme Wilson, Myron T. Herrick, Robert Bacon, and Clarence H. Mackay.

The office of the American Committee, to which all gifts should be addressed, is 32 Liberty Street.

Armenian and Syrian Relief.

The following letter from Harrison A. Maynard, a relief agent of the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, 1 Madison Avenue, has been made public by the Committee:

"Why should we live?" a woman who used to work for him asked Mr. Maynard. "In spite of herself we encouraged her to work," goes on the letter, "and now she is somewhat happy and very industrious. Another woman of a different disposition was so harassed by memories of the massacres and by thoughts of the murder of her only son, a teacher in the American School at Bitlis, that she could not sleep. When first given wool to spin she worked at it desperately, going out at night into the street to spin by the light of the street lamp, as she had none in the house. When she has no wool to spin she comes to our house, picks over wheat by hand, sews, or does anything we can give her. Now I notice that the lines of her face are less drawn and she is beginning to be somewhat composed."

Work has helped these women immensely. But they are only two out of tens of thousands of similarly conditioned women in the Caucasus. Realizing their need, we have opened a shop to employ as many as possible. Already 800 women are employed in combing, spinning, and knitting wool. The first 20,000 pairs of stockings knitted will be given away with the clothing we are providing from the $100,000 recently promised by the American Committee for Armenian Relief.

But we are not contented with employing only 600 or 700 women. We are eager to open up similar work in other centres and to extend it to weaving, which would provide spinning for more women as well as weaving for the men. Thus many could provide for their own needs as well as have the moral benefit which comes from occupation. Such a work, of course, would require considerable capital, but at the same time it would be small in proportion to the good accomplished and the number helped. Our hopes are tied to the friends in America. If possible we urge that funds be raised for this purpose, bearing in mind that it is the widows and orphan girls whom we hope especially to serve.

American Huguenot Committee.

The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, 105 East Twenty-second Street, of which the Rev. Dr. Charles S. Macfarland is the General Secretary, acknowledges on behalf of the American Huguenot Committee recent donations amounting to $656. This fund assists the Huguenot churches of France and Belgium. ### American Students Committee.

The American Students' Committee of the Ecole des Beaux-Arts, which is devoted to the immediate relief of the students of the Ecole des Beaux-Arts and Julian's Academy who are serving their country at the front, and their families, has collected to date more than $33,070. The fund provides as well comfort kits, consisting of sweaters, mufflers, socks, tobacco, &c., for the soldiers. Last week's gifts amounted to $275. Subscriptions should be sent to Henry R. Sedgwick, Treasurer, 107 East Thirty-seventh Street, New York.

Red Cross in France.

The first complete report on the organization which the American Red Cross has built up in France, since the arrival of the Red Cross Commission in June, to handle its work for the American expeditionary force and the French people, has been made public by H. P. Davison, Chairman of the War Council.

A staff of 864 persons has been gathered together in that time, under the direction of Major Grayson M. P. Murphy, head of the Red Cross Commission to France. Of these, 517 are serving without salary or living allowance from the Red Cross. Among these volunteers are prominent American business men, technical experts, and women experienced in the handling of relief supplies. All have put their time freely at the command of the Red Cross. Owing to the large number who have responded to the Red Cross call for volunteers, it has been possible to organize the present efficient staff in Paris at an average cost to the Red Cross of about $300 per year for each worker.

There are 347 employes on the Red Cross payroll, including 96 day laborers used in handling supplies and in construction. The average wage paid to these 347 persons is $80 per year. Major Grayson M. P. Murphy cables, further, that he is "carefully studying payrolls with a view to further reduction."

The remaining 517 workers are either serving without compensation and at their own expense, or are paid by their former employers, who have loaned them to the Red Cross for war service, or are paid from private subscriptions.

The expenses of the Infant Welfare Unit, for instance, are met by a special gift made for this express purpose by Mrs William Lowell Putnam of Boston. Major Murphy also obtained by private subscription, before he sailed for France, a fund of $100,000 which is applied toward the expenses of the commission.

The headquarters of the American Red Cross in Paris are in an ample building on the Place de la Concorde, provided for the use of the commission, rent free, through the generosity of one of its members.

"Of our 347 employes paid from the Red Cross fund," Major Murphy cables, "262 receive annual compensation of less than $1,200 per year. Fifty employes receive compensation of $1,200 and $2,100 annually. Fifteen employes receive from the Red Cross annual compensation in excess of $2,100 per annum."

The staff of over 800 persons is handling the entire relief work of the American Red Cross in France, which has developed to huge proportions as one need after another has been noted by the commission's expert investigators. Already plans calling for the expenditure of more than $10,000,000 in behalf of the American Army in France and French troops and the French civilian population have been outlined.

FFW REAL SLACKERS, GEN. CARTER SAYS

Major Gen. William H. Carter, U. S. A., commanding the Western Department of the army, with headquarters in Chicago, in a recent report said that in his opinion the great majority of men called to service in the selective draft, who failed to report, did so through ignorance and not with any desire to shirk their duties. It is an injustice, he said, to brand these men as "slackers."

"I believe the number who wilfully failed to report is insignificant," said General Carter, "and these men should be branded as slackers. Send them to camp with their self-respect."

Referring to the coming service of American troops in France, General Carter made the following prediction:

"They will come back," he said, better than when they left, and after fifty years in the army I want to predict that the death rate among our men is going to be less to the men involved than it was in the civil war."

The largest artillery range in the United States is now in process of construction at Petersburg, Va. Major Gen. Grenkhite, U. S. A., for so many years artillery officer of the Eastern Department on Governors Island, will direct this work at the range, which will be in use within a few weeks. The site of the range is a field of about 5,000 acres. Several regiments of field artillery can be instructed at the range, the man capacity of which is expected to be about 10,000. This range will be the place to which artillery units will be sent for final training just before they are ordered overseas.

Two of the best known of the younger field artillery officers have recently been promoted to Colonel. They are William McK. Lambdin and William L. Westervelt. Both were until recently on duty in New York. They are bachelors and are from Texas. Lambdin is one of the finest shots in the United States and was once a Texas Ranger. Westervelt is an ordnance expert and was on duty at the Sandy Hook Proving Grounds when promoted to be Colonel and transferred to the field artillery. Westervelt is known to all West Pointers as "Tex."

The suddenness with which officers are shifted from one duty to another in wartime is strikingly illustrated in the case of Major Gen. C. M. Townsley, the former Superintendent of the Military Academy at West Point. When war was declared on Germany General Townsley, then a Brigadier, was in command of the southeastern artillery district, with headquarters at Charleston, S. C. Several months ago General Townsley was promoted to Major General and ordered to the Philippines. He arrived at Manila on Aug. 2, and on Aug. 6 received orders from Washington to return to the United States on the first available ship. Brig. Gen. Barrette, who is to command the artillery at Camp Upton, is a passenger on the same ship on board of which General Townsley is returning to the United States.

Construction has begun at Fort Sam Houston, near San Antonio, Texas, of a $20,000 building which is to be used as an engineer depot. Construction will also shortly begin on similar depot buildings for the medical and quartermaster services.

Brig. Gen. Harry C. Hale, now en route to the United States, and who at the outbreak of the war was commanding the American troops stationed at Tientsin, China, received an "allied" send-off when he sailed for home. He was escorted to his ship by an honor guard composed of British, French, Japanese, and Chinese troops, in addition to the regiment of American regulars, whose command he had just relinquished. In honor of General Hale the British commander ordered the Stars and Stripes flown alongside the Union Jack from the British headquarters. All of the allied consular officials joined the farewell demonstration.

The National Army cantonment with the largest population is Camp Lee, near Petersburg, Va., where 46,803 men from Virginia, West Virginia, and Pennsylvania are in training. The cantonment with the smallest population is Camp Custer, near Battle Creek, Mich., with 35,986 men. The population of Camp Upton, when New York City's full quota reports to the colors, will be 42,230.

For the first time in history the 1917 Howitzer, the annual publication of the cadets at West Point, is a double number, made necessary by the graduation of two classes in one year. The book is dedicated to West Point's famous Master of the Sword, Major Herman J. Koehler, in "grateful appreciation of his many years of untiring effort for the welfare of the corps."

The army school for non-flying officers of the Aviation Section is now in full operation at San Antonio. The school is the only one of its kind in this country, and is expected to provide training for about 800 officers. The course of instruction lasts eight weeks. Fifteen instructors constitute the staff, under command of Captain Hubert R. Harmon, U. S. A.

The youngest Lieutenant Colonel in the army is Thomas De Witt Milling, next to Brig. Gen. Foulois, the army's most noted flier. Colonel Milling, who was 30 years old a few weeks ago, is now in France, and is in command of the air operations division under General Pershing. Milling is from New Orleans, and is a West Pointer of the class of 1909.

Colonel Albertus W. Catlin, U. S. M. C., who was fleet commander of marines, on the staff of Admiral Badger, during the Mexican troubles of 1914, will command one of the marine regiments which will fight with General Pershing's army in France. Colonel Catlin is a New Yorker and is a graduate of the Naval Academy of the class of 1896

Lieut. Col. Allie W. Williams, Medical Corps, who was one of the senior medical officers at Vera Cruz, is at work on a plan for the removal of the wounded from the battle lines. The system proposed, it is stated, would make it unnecessary for ambulances to proceed direct to the firing zone. The scheme is primarily intended to increase the chances of the desperately wounded. Colonel Williams is at present the medical chief at the Plattsburg Officers' Training Camp.

Rear Admiral Samuel McGowan, Paymaster General of the United States Navy, and Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, in the Navy Department, is considered by naval officers the most efficient business man in the service of the nation. Admiral McGowan, under whose direction every cent for the support and maintenance of the navy is expended, handles that tremendous job with a force of less than 150 persons, and this number includes everybody from officers to messenger boys. Admiral McGowan, before he entered the navy, was a South Carolina newspaper reporter. He is 47 years of age, and the youngest officer ever appointed Paymaster General of the navy.

The great training camp of the United States Marine Corps at Quantico, Va., where are trained the officers and men destined for service in France, is, at present, the best equipped cantonment in the United States. The commander of the camp is Brig. Gen. John Archer Lejeune, an officer who has seen hard service in every part of the world. General Lejeune was on the old Vandalia when that ship was wrecked in the Samoan hurricane of 1889, with the loss of forty-three officers and men; he commanded one of the first marine battalions landed in Cuba in 1898; was one of the senior commanders at Vera Cruz, and commanded the force which was sent ashore at Panama during the revolution which separated Panama from Colombia in 1903. General Lejeune is a native of Louisiana, and a graduate of the Naval Academy of the class of 1884. He is also an honor graduate of the Army War College.

Brig. Gen. Robert E. Lee Michie, commanding one of the brigades in the New York Division at Spartanburg, is one of the crack horsemen of the army. He is a West Pointer of the class of 1885 and is a native of Virginia. He was aid to General Scott on the visit of the American Commission, under Elihu Root, to Russia. Prior to that he was one of the Colonels attached to the General Staff.

It costs the Government $156.80 to equip an infantryman for service in France. This includes $101.21 for clothing; $7.73 for eating utensils, $47.86 for fighting equipment. Items included under "clothing" include three blankets, two complete uniforms, and two complete sets of warm underwear and two pairs of army shoes. The fighting equipment consists of one rifle, costing $19.50; one bayonet, $2.15; 100 cartridges, $5; one gas mask, $12; one cartridge belt, $4.06; one bayonet scabbard, $1.13; one steel helmet, $3, and one trench tool at 50 cents.

CENTRAL AMERICAN REPUBLICS MAY UNITE

TWO inches of type, with headlines so diminutive as to appear self-effacing, told the readers of the American newspapers a few days ago that the Central American republics were taking steps to unite. It was stated in a brief cablegram from Salvador that the movement to form a substantial Federation of Central American States was well under way; that the President of Honduras had originated the plan of uniting; that all of the other four republics—Salvador, Costa Rica, Guatemala, and Nicaragua—had signified their willingness to attend a conference looking to this union, and that demonstrations of delight had attended the favorable responses to the proposition.

Had such news come to the American newspapers four years ago, when all the nations of the earth were at peace and "drinking delight in a fool's paradise" at The Hague, the headline writer's hand would not have itched from idleness. Had it been intimated to us of the United States that a republic was forming close to our Panama Canal, with a total population just 2,800,000 short of Canada's, with a seacoast of a thousand miles on the Atlantic and a thousand miles on the Pacific, and with a standing army of more than 300,000, at least we would have looked at one another and remarked, "Important, if true."

The truth of the matter is that, should the movement now well under way in Central America prove successful, (and there now seems little doubt of it,) a republic will be formed between the United States and the Panama Canal more than one-third as large as Mexico. It will be a political union of States which, with the power of making treaties with all the first-class nations of the earth, might one of these days come to figure in a significant way in the affairs of all the Americas.

For nearly a hundred years these tiny republics of the Caribbean quarter have not been getting along well together. Rebellions would arise among them, or within them, and they were not potential factors in the shaping of the earth's history Their own development was retarded by these continual quarrels, and while they were rich in natural resources, this wealth was of little worth to them. Ships from the powerful nations of the earth would pass their ports, take away whatever they had to sell, and that was about all they could boast in the making of world history.

When the Honduran Consulate at 31 Broadway was asked for information concerning the causes that led to this movement for unity of the Central American republics at a time when the world's map was being changed in other ways abroad, Señor Andres Soriano, the Consul, smiled and said with a shrug of his shoulders: "My dear Sir, is it not time for some countries to be building up instead of tearing down?

"It is very pleasant to discuss this matter for an American newspaper, for, should this republic be formed, we of Central America will have more ability to develop our friendships with our powerful neighbor, the United States. Of course the bulk of our trading is now, and shall continue to be, with the United States.

"As to the beginning of this movement, let me say that it appears to have come up all of a sudden. It is the outcome of another movement altogether. You see, these five republics of Central America—Honduras, Guatemala, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and Salvador—since 1907 have been dealing with one another through what was known as the Central American Court of Justice. This was established at a conference held at Washington in 1907, and it has worked well. Before that time the republics of Central America were always quarreling with one another. Now, the Court of Justice was to hold for ten years, and the time of its existence will expire next year. Some time last August the President of Salvador, through his Secretary of Foreign Affairs, wrote a letter to all the other republics asking that a convention be held for the purpose of renewing the Court of Justice.

"It was in replying to this letter that the President of my country, Honduras, expressed not only a desire to extend the power of the Court of Justice, but a willingness to send delegates to a conference making for absolute union of all the Central American republics. The suggestion has been received most cordially, according to my unofficial advices from Honduras, by all the republics, and, best of all, the peoples of the various States are deeply interested in the movement. I have not yet received any copy of the official communication the President of Honduras sent to the other republics asking for union, so that I cannot quote any particular reasons he gave for such a federation. I only know that it will be far better for these small nations to get together on a basis of peace and harmony and pool interests for our share of trade and our part in the world's growth.

"There is, indeed, strength in union, while there is positive danger in pulling apart. When we think of the fate of the small nations of Europe are we not led to feel that they have existed in vain when they must be dealt destruction by the larger powers? Well, while the people of Central America are not ambitious ever to figure in war of any kind, we all do feel a keen desire to build up and make more potent the affairs of our quarter of the earth."

At this point Señor Soriano told of the wealth of his country and of the neighboring countries. He went across the office to a large map of Central America. "Here will be the new republic," he smiled, and as he described each of the lands which may compose it the visitor gained a comprehensive idea of the force behind the proposed federation.

Put in tabular form, it looks like this:

| | Square Miles. | Population. |
|---|---|---|
| Salvador | 7,225 | 1,225,835 |
| Costa Rica | 23,000 | 420,000 |
| Guatemala | 48,290 | 2,003,579 |
| Honduras | 44,275 | 562,000 |
| Nicaragua | 49,000 | 703,540 |
| Total | 171,790 | 4,914,854 |

It was explained by Señor Soriano that the populations of the different countries had materially increased since these figures were taken in the last census. He said that the total population of the new republic would be much larger than that given, for the reason that it had been a good many years since some of the republics had had an actual census, and it was known that they had grown materially in population in the last few years. In fact, he said that since the Central American Court of Justice was established a wave of prosperity had been passing over all the republics, and they had made great progress, not only in the increase of population, but likewise also in the development of their resources.

It is of interest to note that each of these little republics maintains an army. San Salvador has a military strength of 378 officers and 82,881 men. Costa Rica stands ready to put into the field any day 52,208 soldiers, and on a war basis this can be quickly doubled. Guatemala is stronger than them all in a military sense, but the figures were not available. Honduras can throw 55,000 into war at a moment's notice, so to speak, and while Nicaragua keeps only 4,000 troops in barracks, she can, on a war basis, mobilize 40,000, according to the military system upon which her army is based.

These figures are significant. They show that should these tiny republics unite they would extend almost to the portals of the Panama Canal, which would mean a considerable army on a ticklish part of the map.

In case the new republic formed alliances with powerful nations abroad there are railroads which extend from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The principal seaport on the Atlantic side, perhaps, would be Puerto Cortes, in Honduras, and on the Pacific, La Union or Amapala. There are, however, several ports which are surrounded by cities of nearly 50,000 population.

There is great wealth in these little domains, consisting chiefly of agricultural products. The coffee industry is first among the business interests of Salvador. In this country alone there are 166,039 acres in coffee, and the annual production is around 75,000,000 pounds. Some efforts have been made to encourage the production of cotton, but with indifferent success. The trade of Salvador has been mostly with the United States, Germany, and France. There are many foreign investments in this country, mainly in timber, mineral, and railroads.

Honduras is distinctly a cattle country, though this industry has never been developed to anything like the degree to which it may be. It is also wealthy in minerals. There are rich deposits of gold, platinum, silver, and copper, and a large sum of foreign money is invested in these mines. Of course, the bulk of the export trade is in fruit—bananas, cocoanuts, and so on. Social conditions in Honduras are well advanced. The systems of education and health are good. There are few children in Honduras of school age who have not had educational advantages.

Costa Rica is productive of fruit and coffee, and these constitute the bulk of her trade. The United Fruit Company, formerly under the British flag but in recent years transferred to the United States flag, has proved a great power in the development of Costa Rica. There are railroads between the larger cities which pretty well traverse the entire country, one of them, 383 miles in length, connecting the Atlantic and Pacific seacoasts of Costa Rica.

It is generally believed by the Consular representatives of all these Central American republics stationed in New York that the plan of unity will go through. They are of the opinion that the people of their countries are in high glee over the prospect of having "one big" republic on the Isthmus instead of being so widely separated in political government. Their people are of the same races—aborigines and Spaniards and mixed Indian races. Their language is the same—Spanish. Their resources and products are kindred—agriculture, timber, and mineral. By forming one country they could look upon ships in the Pacific from one door and upon ships that ply the Atlantic from the other door, and from their housetops they all might look over poor little Panama and see—

What Ladies Like

And What Men Like in Mitchells

We have consulted hundreds of men and hundreds of women as to features they like in a car. We have watched them at shows, to see attractions which appealed. We have noted the extras which buyers add to most cars.

Now the Mitchell line, we think, includes every wanted feature. It combines all the best attractions. Among them are 31 star features which nearly all cars omit.

Appeals to Women

Our bodies are designed by Mitchell experts, so each type is exclusive.

They are built in our own new body plant. This saves a large sum per car. And that whole saving goes into extra luxury and beauty. So Mitchells are the handsomest cars you see at any modest price.

To keep them new we use a heat-fixed finish. The luster is deep and enduring.

We use extra-grade leather and deep cushion springs. We use a long wheelbase to give ample room.

There are handles for entering. There are shock-absorbing springs, so the roughest roads are easy. There is a light in the tonneau, a locked compartment for valuables.

There is a power tire pump, a dashboard engine primer, a cane control. All to please women drivers.

Extra-Smart Cars

The 4-passenger sport car is the pattern car of its type.

The convertible models—Sedan and Cabriolet—offer scores of new ideas in luxurious all-season cars.

The Coupe, Town Car and Limousine are studies in artistic body building. Our designers have combined here all the best ideas developed.

100% Over-Strength

But the greatest Mitchell feature is the double-strength in every vital part. Three years ago we doubled our margins of safety. We made parts larger, stronger and of better steels. We established radical tests.

The result today is a lifetime car, with repair cost reduced 75 per cent.

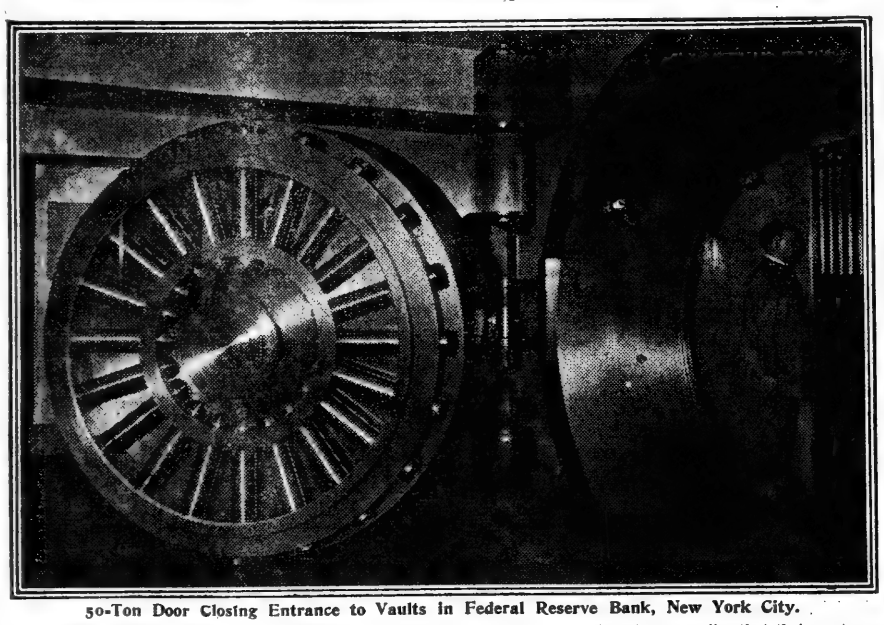
IMPORTANT PART PLAYED BY FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS

Twelve Banks Operating as Units of the Federal Reserve System Make Possible the Successful Handling of the Two Liberty Loans.



50-Ton Door Closing Entrance to Vaults in Federal Reserve Bank, New York City.

ON THE ground floor in the southeast corner of the Equitable Building is what to the casual observer might appear to be a small bank. Its appearance is deceptive, for, although the room one enters from the main door in Nassau Street is not large, the space occupied by the bank is spread out over several floors above and below the ground. It is the Federal Reserve Bank for the Second District.

There are eleven other such banks in as many districts distributed throughout the country. These twelve banks, operating as units of the Federal Reserve system, made it possible for the Government to borrow two billion dollars from its citizens in the form of the first Liberty Loan and will make it possible for the Government to float the second Liberty Loan of more than three billion dollars without disastrous disorganization of the nation's financial and business life. This is the opinion of the experts. Benjamin Strong, Governor of the Reserve Bank in New York, was asked the other day what would have happened to the country if the attempt to float the two Liberty Loans had been made without the machinery of the Federal Reserve system.

"I might as well try to say what would happen if the sun stopped shining," he said. "It is impossible to tell what would have happened. How the two Liberty Loans could be floated without the Reserve Banks, I do not know. I really don't see how the loans would have been possible. Of all the fortunate things that happened to this country before the war, the establishment of the Federal Reserve system was certainly as important as any."

The natural question for the layman to ask is: Why are the Reserve Banks so important? Mr. Strong outlines in this interview the two main features of the Reserve Bank's function in connection with the Liberty Loans.

"We are a selling organization to dispose of the Government's bonds," he said, "and a financial machine to keep the balance in the banking and business world and prevent disturbance that might result from such big transactions as the floating of the Liberty Loans."

The part of the Reserve Banks in selling Liberty bonds is easy to understand, but many do not appreciate the scope and character of organization required. The Reserve Bank in New York began business in October, 1914, with two or three officers and a dozen clerks. Last April there were about 100 people on the bank's staff. Then the Reserve Banks were made the fiscal agents of the Government in placing the first Liberty Loan, and 500 employes were added to the staff for office work. It was also necessary to organize a large force of salesmen, and when the campaign for the second Liberty Loan was opened last Monday 15,000 men and women were ready for the canvass of the Second Reserve District, which will reach every town, city, trade, activity, and even individual in the district.

Many of these workers, especially the office assistants, had to be specially trained. For weeks before the starting gun for the second loan was fired squads of bookkeepers, clerks, accountants, and other specialists were drilled at the bank. Specimen transactions were practiced by them until they developed speed and accuracy in their work. The bookkeeping necessary for receiving, recording, and tabulating subscriptions to the loans is extensive. During the last few days before the subscriptions for the first Liberty Loan closed, the Federal Reserve Bank handled thousands of telegrams, letters, telephone calls, and visitors. The volume of business that the bank will encounter in floating the second loan will greatly exceed that of the first.

The bank is the centre of the selling organization, but works through a committee, composed largely of bankers, which has subdivided the Reserve District and organized a committee in each subdivision. The main committee has also formed publicity organizations which have particular charge of news, advertising, public speaking, and in general of educating the public to save money and buy Liberty bonds.

The machinery for selling the Government's bonds, keeping proper records of their issue and making deliveries is not, however, the most important part of the bank's work. Of much greater importance is the problem of floating a Liberty Loan without disturbance to the money market. The bank must keep the financial boat steady. Before the Loan is announced banks all over the country receive deposits, redeeming checks from a comparatively small reserve, and do their own business with the rest of their customers' money. When the Government announces a Liberty Loan, the bankers of the country at once realize that their customers will want money in more than usual amounts in order to pay for bonds. Each bank, therefore, must increase its supply of cash. There develops a widespread demand for money, and, under the conditions that existed before the creation of the Federal Reserve Banks, the available supply might have been greatly insufficient. A panic might have been brought about.

But, as conditions are, all of the national banks keep supplies of money in the Federal Reserve Banks upon which they can draw, and, in addition, any bank in the system may borrow from a Reserve Bank. In order to meet the demands of the State and national banks the Reserve Banks keep in their vaults money equal to about 90 per cent. of their deposits and other liabilities. The result is that, when depositors call upon their banks for money with which to buy bonds, the banks call upon the Reserve Banks for money with which to pay their depositors.

In the vault of the Reserve Bank of New York, behind a great door, weighing fifty tons, is kept the bank's big reserve. It is the ballast of the financial ship. If the demand for money in any section of the country is such as to reduce the supply below that of normal times, the Government may assist in obtaining funds for temporary use by transferring deposits. These transfers can be made by telegraph in the form of credits, and shipments of actual money can follow in a short time.

After the subscriptions to the Liberty Loan are closed, the popular demand for money is reduced and the money which has been used to pay for bonds is again more or less at the command of the national and State banks of the country. But these banks have received the money from their customers for the Government and must, therefore, settle with the Government. If they were required to turn over actual cash to the Government and so drain their reserves, many of them could not stand the strain. Again the Reserve Banks step in and keep order from becoming chaos. Where actual payments are made by State and national banks, the Reserve Banks, acting as fiscal agents of the Government, at once redeposit these payments with the banks from which they came, and the reserves of the paying banks are not depleted. Sometimes, instead of making remittances, a State or national bank merely credits the Government on its books with the amount due, having previously furnished the Government with collateral.

The result, therefore, of the Federal Reserve system is that the suddenly increased demand for money, the large obligations assumed by State and national banks, and the transfers of cash and credit necessary for the floating of a Liberty Loan do not have the effect of disorganizing the money market and disturbing business.

217 YEARS TO IMPROVE 500 MILES OF THE MISSISSIPPI

To the Editor of The New York Times:

SENATOR WILLIAM S. KENYON, in his recent interview published in THE TIMES, told of a saving of millions by lopping off millions of the River and Harbor bill, and mentioned the work of improving navigation of the Mississippi, which is of vital importance to the American people at this time.

An act of Congress that became a law June 29, 1879, created the present Mississippi River Commission. Quoting from this act:

To develop the channel and protect the banks, improve and give safety and ease to navigation thereon; promote and facilitate commerce, trade, and the postal service.

We cannot see that this has been done in thirty-seven years. The only explanation that has been given is that the Mississippi appropriations should have been applied as a whole, not locally. So far as can be seen, the appropriations have been applied on 960 miles of the river, from New Orleans to the mouth of the Ohio River.

Congress at the time of the enactment of the law in 1897 realized that in order to obtain the improvement to the navigation of the Mississippi River a permanent channel would have to be obtained, and this by protecting the caving embankments. The ineffective means employed during the thirty-seven years elapsed has resulted in the poor showing thus far made.

A brief description may help those who do not know the conditions that exist. From the mouth of the Ohio River to New Orleans, a distance of 960 miles, the embankments on each side of the river are constantly caving, discharging millions of cubic yards of earth into the river, choking the channel and diverting it from its natural bed, which results in loss and damage in time of flood and is an impediment to navigation.

Since the creation of the commission, June 28, 1879, to June 30, 1916, the date of the last report, 87.1 miles of so-called protective coverings were placed. This is an average of 2.3 miles per year of protection in thirty-seven years.

In order to protect 500 miles of caving embankment, the least amount that may be required of the 960 miles, it would take the Mississippi River Commission 217 years to improve the navigation of the Mississippi River.

The Mississippi River Commission sought to protect the caving embankment with mattresses of willow poles woven together with brush. These coverings were placed on the steep slopes above water and below on sub-aqueous surface sunk and held in place with stone. Such coverings have proved to be a failure when used extensively. They slide away and disappear. They require constant inspection; surveys are made in order to ascertain their condition; miles of the work have been lost, and miles of repairs have been made in thirty-seven years. This is where the money goes. The more miles laid, the greater the cost of maintenance, repairs, surveys, office costs, deterioration of plant, &c., as shown by the report of June 30, 1916.

The deterioration and maintenance cost increases in direct ratio each year, which amounts to more than the first cost. The supply of willow brush and poles will be practically exhausted in three years should the commission decide to place ten miles per year of this form, including new work and repairs to old work. Even at this rate it will take the commission fifty years to make the river navigable for commercial purposes.

Other means have been discovered where concrete coverings can be used with better results. The cost of maintenance will be reduced to a minimum. Such methods though have been treated with indifference up to the present time.

Now is the time to take notice of these facts when the whole country is threatened with disaster. Every means to make available the greatest waterway in the country should be taken. Germany is now, at this time, in the midst of war, digging canals to link up its rivers as a national means of transportation to carry out its well-laid plans to defeat us.

THE EUROPEAN WAR

A Library of the Best Literature of the War

Not a History of Facts But the Facts of History

Ten Volumes, 6,000 Pages, 480 Pages of Illustrations, 600 Cartoons of All the Nations

COMPILED FROM THE NEW YORK TIMES CURRENT HISTORY MAGAZINE

HISTORY'S greatest conflict is recorded in THE EUROPEAN WAR Published By The New York Times The important official documents of the Governments engaged in the strife are collated and printed in the ten volumes. In no other publication can be found so many speeches and Parliamentary addresses of the statesmen of each nation, outlining the policies of their Governments. The work is invaluable to libraries, both public and private; to students, to universities, colleges, schools and scholars, as well as to every intelligent family.

One of the attractions of the books is the fact that they were written by many persons, all having distinguished careers in the countries allied with the Central Powers of Europe and the Entente Allies. State papers, reports of commissions, reports from Generals commanding armies, letters from war correspondents, each with a different literary style, give the work unusual fascination.

Compendium of Best Literature

THE TEN VOLUMES are a compendium of the best literature of the war. The books contain the living documents of the struggle. THE EUROPEAN WAR Published By The New York Times is history in the making, with the atmosphere and the heat of the controversies.

Incidents, happenings and occurrences are given, as well as the official writings which will go into the archives of fighting nations. The naked facts of history are presented—the literal truths; the uncolored statements; the exact charges of the countries affiliated with both sides in the struggle—actualities, not illusions.

Does one desire to be fully informed upon the important question, "Who caused the War?" This work will enable him to form an intelligent opinion. It not only contains the correspondence between Ambassadors and statesmen, previous to the outbreak, but the speeches of noted men and special articles on happenings preceding the opening of hostilities, prepared by the most noted writers in the world.

Impartial Statements on All Sides

EDITORS of impartial and judicial trend of mind supervised the preparation of THE EUROPEAN WAR Published By The New York Times State papers and documents, the great addresses, the accessible reports of the military commanders of the armies on both sides, statements of civilians in the countries at war, have been printed without change. Thus not only the point of view of the leaders, both civil and military, is presented, but the opinions of the people at large. No fact has been changed, distorted or omitted.

An Accurate History of the War

A SERIES of introductions, one for each of the ten volumes, has been written for the work by some of the best historical authorities in the United States. This series of narratives, taken together, forms an accurate, concise, consecutive history of the war to date. Each introduction is a comprehensive, analytical narrative of the events of a period of three months. The articles and documents which follow give in great detail the separate occurrences.

Among the scholars and students of the war who have prepared the narratives are: Albert Bushnell Hart, Ph.D., LL.D., Lit.D., of Harvard University; Paul Van Dyke, D.D., of Princeton; Charles Seymour, Ph.D., of Yale and Dr. W. E. Lingelbach of the University of Pennsylvania.

Description of the Great Work

MORE than 6,000 pages are contained in the ten volumes which compose the set—over 600 pages in each volume.

The rotogravure process has been used in reproducing pictures of scenes on the firing line and in the surrounding area, as well as photographs of the men whose names will go down in history. In all there are 480 pages of illustrations. A feature of the work is the numerous maps and charts, many of which have been reproduced from the most accurate products of military topography, enabling readers of THE EUROPEAN WAR Published By The New York Times to trace the movements of all the armies. There are also 600 international cartoons. These are of great interest, showing the trend of thought and feeling in both neutral and warring countries.

Any article or event desired is readily accessible, owing to the comprehensive and accurate index in each volume.

One Dollar Obtains the Set

ON receipt of an initial payment of ONE DOLLAR, the complete set of ten volumes, in cloth binding, will be shipped at once, all charges prepaid.

To each person ordering the introductory edition, Current History Magazine, issued monthly, will be sent for a full year without additional charge. The regular price of this magazine is $3.00 a year.

Bindings and Prices

THE introductory edition has been bound in three styles. Descriptions of the bindings, with the cash and easy-payment prices, are as follows:

Cloth—a handsome, durable edition. Price: Cash in full with order, $28.00. Easy payment plan, $33.00; initial cash payment, $1.00, on receipt of which the complete set of ten volumes will be shipped, all charges prepaid; subsequent payments, $2.00 per month.

Three-quarter leather—with gilt top; a beautiful edition worthy of a place in the best library. Price: Cash in full with order, $38.00, on receipt of which the complete set of ten volumes will be shipped, all charges prepaid.

Full leather—gilt edges, gold tooled titles; an elegant edition in the latest style of the bookbinder's art. Price: Cash in full with order, $50.00, on receipt of which the complete set of ten volumes will be shipped, all charges prepaid.

NEW ORGANIZATION HELPS NEGRO MISFITS

Associated Colored Employes of America Aim to Bring About Systematic Distribution of Laborers.

WHEN a negro honor graduate from Harvard is compelled to accept employment in Wall Street as a porter, and when statistics show that in New York City there were until recently 2,803 other negroes who had been trained for the trades, of which number only one, a mechanic, was employed in the line for which he was best adapted, it is interesting to learn that an organization now has been formed to correct as far as possible such a situation. Until a few weeks ago there was no organization exclusively devoted to the work of properly placing the negro. Incorporated under the laws of New York, the Associated Colored Employes of America, at 74 Cortlandt Street, is meeting with success in adjusting industrial misfits. There are no dues or assessments. The only expense to a member is a fee of $2.

"A conservative estimate of the number of negroes crossing the Mason and Dixon line every week is 5,000," said John A. Ross, the organization's President, who was graduated from the New York University and for several years was cashier for an insurance company, "and yet this exodus from the South, which began soon after August, 1914, has had no appreciable effect upon the labor shortage. This has been due to the fact that there has been no systematic distribution of labor."

"Will the negroes return to the South?" he was asked.

"No one knows. But some idea of how those who remain there are urged to go North, for a while at least, may be gained by reading editorials in influential negro newspapers. For instance, here is the advice of one such publication in South Carolina.

"The editorial said in part:

Negroes still going North. A crowd left from Greenwood Saturday night. A farm boy of Greenwood went North last October to work for $25 a week. He came home last week to assist his people on the farm and brought more than $100 and plenty of nice clothes. He gave his mother $50, put $50 in the Greenwood County Bank, and had some pocket change left. Good, indeed, for him. Scores of others could and should do likewise. They should hurry back.

"As it is practically an impossibility," Mr. Ross continued, "to arrest the exodus, despite the action of certain Southern cities in placing a prohibitive tax on labor agencies seeking to move negroes to the North, the logical remedy is to regulate the influx to the benefit of all concerned. The large employers need laborers; the negroes need work. Proper distribution is the only answer to the question that now confronts the North.

"First, it must be understood that more than 20,000 skilled negro workers have come North during the last three years. Among 2,803 men and women in New York City who have been especially trained in the trades our records showed that only one was employed at his calling. The rest were porters, elevator operators, chauffeurs, waiters, common laborers, and so on. The women were employed as chambermaids, waitresses, and in other unskilled occupations, although many of them were graduated from Tuskegee, Hampton, and other industrial schools. These colored people had left the South to come here because of the promise of better wages, better schools and better living conditions. Common labor pays better in the North than skilled labor in the South. The immediate economic benefit, coupled with the knowledge that the law offers better protection to them in the North, almost always acts as a powerful restraining influence upon an intelligent negro in the matter of returning to the South to stay.

"Our organization is conducting a survey and census of all negro workers in New York City and vicinity. Already we have collected a mass of valuable information regarding the trades in which negroes are to be found, and in what numbers. We are compiling facts to show labor conditions, wages, and hours of work, which will be used as a first-hand source of information for colored workers eager to come here from the South. In this work the organization is functioning as an employment bureau, making no charge to union members, and advising them where their particular work is to be found.

"Although the survey is yet far from completed, the union has found an amazing number of instances of misfit workers. It has found graduate engineers and electricians, experienced carpenters, painters, shipbuilders, and tailors engaged in the roughest forms of labor.

"Several avenues hitherto closed to negro employment have been opened for their admittance through our efforts. For instance, an electrician who was employed for several months as a waiter has been placed with a corporation that manufactures electrical appliances. A mason and plasterer has been transferred from the docks, where he worked as a longshoreman, to the service of a contractor and builder. Still another amateur longshoreman has found proper work in the shop of a large tailoring establishment.

"In some cases the misfits have been tragic, affecting men trained for high professions. Not long ago there was an instance of a young colored man who was graduated with honor from Harvard. Being unsuccessful in his search for employment, he was compelled to accept a position as porter in one of the exchanges in the financial district. A broker in the exchange was graduated from Harvard in the class with the colored man. When the broker met the porter he frequently would call to a fellow-member, and say, 'Come, meet my friend, Blank. We graduated in the same class at Harvard.' Of course, as soon as the negro saved enough he resigned and took up work for which his training fitted him, eventually winning recognition as a writer.

"To trained colored women conditions are equally discouraging. An accident to one of the members of a family living in Washington Square recently revealed the fact that the chambermaid was both a trained nurse and dressmaker and exceptionally capable in both capacities. Despairing of getting work in her special lines, she accepted the job of chambermaid. There are milliners employed as general houseworkers, bookkeepers as domestics, and stenographers as errand girls. Less than one-twentieth of 1 per cent. of skilled workers in the trades investigated are fittingly employed."

"The following figures," said Mr. Ross, "show the number of trained men and women in trades investigated by his organization to date:

| SKILLED LABOR, (MEN.) | |
|---|---|
| Shipbuilders | 283 |
| Engineers | 236 |
| Mechanics | 517 |
| Tailors | 281 |
| Carpenters | 132 |
| Cooks | 302 |
| Painters | 141 |
| Electricians | 72 |
| Cigarmakers | 93 |
| SKILLED LABOR, (WOMEN.) | |
| Seamstresses | 481 |
| Milliners | 113 |
| Bookkeepers | 182 |
| Total | 2,803 |

"In establishing a negro labor union in New York City we have received the promise of the support of the New York State Labor Department and the sympathetic co-operation of some of the most important corporations in the country. In the case of the corporations, particularly, this active interest is due to experience gained in the employment of negroes during the last three years. The Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company at East Pittsburgh, Penn., has among its 14,000 employes 1,100 negroes. The Superintendent of the company says: 'The negroes have proved careful, industrious, sober, and patient. Tardiness and slowness are their main weaknesses.' A large department store in New York employs thirty-one negroes out of a total of 5,000 persons. The negroes are not segregated.

"We propose properly to distribute negro workers to the parts of the country where they are most needed and where they can do the country and themselves the most good. The South, as well as the North, realizes that the negro in industry can be ignored no longer, for he has become an economic force."

In a recent issue The Richmond (Va.) Journal stated:

The South will presently find herself minus the most desirable workmen and saddled with only the poorer quality of negro labor. . . . But why should we have to go North to get simple justice? Why drive away hands that may be hard to coax back, once they are gone? It seems to us that the subject is too serious, too fraught with menace to our local industries, to be dismissed lightly. The Chamber of Commerce could do no better work than to appoint a committee to investigate the grievances of the negro, decide upon the proper remedy, and see that it is enforced.

"As a result of negro migration," commented Mr. Ross, "it is certain that the South ultimately will benefit, economically, as much as the North. Better schools and better living conditions automatically will increase the efficiency of the laborers who remain there.

"Within a year the union plans to have branches in all Northern cities of 5,000 or more negroes. If there is a congestion of laborers in Philadelphia, while Boston is sending out an S O S for men, arrangements will be made immediately to transfer the surplus to Boston. The employer pays only the actual cost and has access to the records of the case whenever wanted. Since the union has been in existence many firms employing large numbers of colored people, or contemplating such employment, have sent their applications to the Associated Colored Employees for investigation. A careful analysis is made of the character of each man or woman seeking work, and complete instructions are given regarding the demands of the position sought. In this way it is hoped always to get the right person for the right place. The demand for labor will increase, due to thousands being called to military duty, while many factories must double their production output to meet the war's requirements."

SLANG AND SLOGANS OF WAR IN FRANCE

By ARTHUR H. WARNER.

AS a resident of France from the beginning of the war until a few months ago there stand out in my memory four war cries, each marking an epoch in the development of the French spirit. They are:

"France d'abord!" (France first!)

"Jusqu'au bout!" (Unto the end!)

"Coûte que coûte!" (Cost what it may!)

"On les aura!" (We will get them!)

How that first watchword, "France first!" comes back to one as expressing the spirit of the Summer of 1914, the period of mobilization and upheaval. It appeared in the newspapers, it was printed on stationery, it was on every lip; and, more important, it was in every heart in those early days of danger.

Everything unessential had to give way. Resolutely and gladly the country subjected itself to a policy of elimination. Museums and theatres were closed at once. Expensive shops and luxurious hotels found that they belonged to a life that had ceased to exist, and, one by one, they shut their doors. The sale of absinthe was prohibited, and the cafés of Paris were closed at 8 P. M.

France lived in those days in a state of patriotic exaltation akin to religious frenzy. Dancing and music were suppressed by public accord. One could not even sing or play the piano behind closed doors in one's own home, unless it was the "Marseillaise" or some other patriotic air.

Then came the Autumn, with the news of the human toll France had paid in the retreat from the border and the glorious stand at the Marne. Came, too, the numbing realization that the war, which had been counted on to end by Christmas, must be fought through the Winter. The patriotic exaltation that had carried France through the early weeks was gone, but in its place grew a sterner, deeper courage. It found expression in two words, made dynamic by use in a message to the people of Paris by General Gallieni. Called upon to serve as Military Governor of the capital when the Germans were just outside its gates, General Gallieni responded:

"I have received the mandate to defend Paris against the invader. This mandate I will fulfill jusqu'au bout!"

"Unto the end!" The soldiers repeated it through gritted teeth as they settled down to hold, from the North Sea to the Vosges, a line of trenches which, during that first Winter, were little more than drainage canals, (which did not drain,) and were as yet inadequately provided with heat or shelter.

"Unto the end!" The civilians repeated it as they faced the gigantic problem of sustaining their soldiers and organizing the country for a protracted war.

Spring found the line still firm and the Entente Allies beginning an offensive which, it was then hoped, would sweep the Germans from France.

A new phrase began to appear in the press—"Coûte que coûte!" (Cost what it may!) It became a watchword. Better pay any price and get through with it. A grim and heroic resolution, but it proved impossible of realization. What had been looked forward to as the great offensive had to be slowed down to await better artillery, more ammunition.

A year later another slogan came into prominence. The defeat of German ambitions at Verdun, and the proof during the Summer of 1916 that at last the Entente Allies had an offensive which could advance against German intrenchments, gave rise to a new sentiment. France had always been hopeful. She now became confident. To voice this new-born attitude she began to popularize a soldier saying of which General Pétain had made use in an order to the troops at Verdun. "On les aura!" (We will get them!) became the most widespread slogan of the war.

In addition to watchwords which have been associated with passing epochs of the war, there are others, serious and amusing, in which popular philosophy has been crystallized. One of these owes its origin to a drawing by the cartoonist Forain, published early in the conflict, in which a soldier in the trenches is represented as saying to another, "If only they hold out!"

"Who?" asks his companion.

"The civilians!" is the answer.

"If only they hold out!" ("Pourvu qu'ils tiennent!") is quoted again and again by persons writing on the war, and each succeeding month adds to its weight in revealing the importance, in a modern struggle of any length, of the effort and spirit of the civilians.

Artists have found inspiration in another phrase, "Arise, ye dead!" ("Debout, les morts!") The story is that a trench held by French soldiers was entered from one end by Germans, making a surprise attack. A dozen of the French fell, dead or wounded, in the fighting, and the rest, believing themselves outnumbered, finally fled. As the Germans advanced to take possession of the trench, one of the men, lying prone before them, rose to his knees in a supreme effort, grasped some hand grenades, and hurling them at the enemy, shouted to his companions stretched on the ground about him, "Arise, ye dead!"

Several among the wounded responded to the heroic cry, and the Germans, frightened at this almost supernatural occurrence, fell back, though not before the Frenchman who initiated the attack had been killed.

Turning from the heroic to the commonplace, one must not forget to mention the ubiquitous phrase, "C'est la guerre," a standing comment and excuse in France since the war. Sometimes it expresses a philosophical recognition of conditions. Sometimes it is an attempt to cover up personal shortcomings. If you complain to your groceryman that his prices are too high, he shrugs his shoulders and replies, "It's the war." If you scold your laundry woman for dropping a splotch of ink on your best shirt, she falls back on the same efficient excuse, "It's the war."

Then there is "Taisez-vous! Méfiez-vous! Les oreilles ennemies vous écoutent," which may be translated, "Dont talk! Be on your guard! The ears of the enemy hear you." This was placarded all over France as a warning. It is not certain that it accomplished any good in that direction, but it has furnished a deal of amusement and has taken its place among the sayings of the war.

The slang of the war comes next to the slogans as interpretative of the psychology of the conflict. The word to which first place should be given from this standpoint is "embusqué." It means literally "in ambush" or "in hiding," but since the war the word has been popularized as a noun to describe men who have been mobilized but who have made use of influential friends to get them a billet well away from the firing line.

The contempt which the French feel for that type of man may be judged from the fact that to call a man an embusqué is the supreme insult. A woman was recently fined for calling a policeman an embusqué, even in the heat of argument.

At the other end of the pole from the embusqué is the poilu. The explanation has been set forth that poilu, or hairy, as a nickname for the French fighting man, is not due to the fact that he is without benefit of barber, but goes back to the time when there existed a body of soldiers who were hairy of hair, from which they came to be known as poilus. As they attained a reputation for great bravery and hardihood, the name came to mean a supersoldier.

Whatever be the historical derivation of the word, it is certain that the average Frenchman uses the term in its literal sense to indicate one whose beard is unshaven and whose hair is unshorn—in other words, a man who has been long enough at the front to become acclimated. The word did not come into general use until some months after the war began. The slang term for a private of the line at the outset of the conflict was piou-piou.

The respect, almost reverence, attached to the word poilu in France today undoubtedly helps many a soldier to bear the grime and the discomfort of the war. It may sometimes lead to an unnecessary exaggeration of them. A clean, new uniform, for instance, is an object of suspicion. The wearer is likely to be taken for that most odious of all creatures, an embusqué.

A French soldier is also spoken of as a "blue" (bleu,) appropriate in view of the color of the new army uniform. The young soldier, who has been called up since the war began, is a "bluet," (bleuet,) and the familiar blue corn flower has become his emblem. Another and older term for one of these youngsters is a Marie-Louise. Strictly speaking, he is a recruit called up ahead of the usual time, but, of course, this is the case in respect to all the new classes mobilized during the present war. The word goes back to the marriage of Napoleon with Marie Louise of Austria in 1810, when France had exhausted her men and was calling up boys for the army.

When a "bluet," or Marie-Louise, first takes the field, he is naturally the object of much good-natured chaff from the veterans. Pierre Falké, a French illustrator, has made a drawing of a smooth-faced youngster arriving at the front, where he is greeted by an underofficer, with a beard like a hedge-hog's back, who says sternly, "It's understood now that if by tomorrow you haven't a mustache, I'll give you four days' imprisonment."

The war seems to have made of the average soldier a philosopher and a fatalist, who jests at danger and radiates cheerfulness, but there are occasions when he does not live up to this part. One of them is when, on leave from the trenches, he reaches the last day of his holiday and must return to the front. Then he loses his smile and his banter, and in soldier slang has the cafard. Literally, the word means cockroach.

The source of that word hoche, an abbreviation of alpoche or alleboche, has been a subject of discussion in France since the war brought the term into prominence. The most plausible explanation seems to be that, in French slang, it is not an infrequent device to substitute boche or oche for the final syllable of a word, with a view to treating it in a trivial or disdainful way, and that alleboche has been thus made from allemand, the recognized word for German.

The spirit of jest and raillery which animates the soldier at the front is expressed in the prevailing description of a shell as a marmite, which in normal life is a pot for cooking stew, and, by extension, the stew itself. Bullets are "prunes," (pruneaux.) A soldier refers to his bayonet affectionately as his "Rosalie," or, more slightingly, as a "fork" or a "toothpick." A machine gun is sometimes a moulin à café, or coffee grinder, and on other occasions a machine à découdre, that is, a machine to unsew, or an "unsewing machine."

Of course, the French soldier is continually christening by new names the familiar objects of his daily life. The beef with which he is served is known as "monkey," (singe,) while wine passes under a number of names, the commonest of which is pinard. The poets of the trenches know how to praise their pinard with all the enthusiasm, if not with the genius of Omar Khayyám.

This new plaid frock, 25.00

(One as sketched)

The brave Highlander wears plaid as he goes "over the top."

So may Milady, although her plaid is quite properly a little longer, a lot more subdued in color and far more fetching in line.

But this model, as sketched, with its surplice effect, full, plaited skirt, winding sash and peg-top pockets, is more suited to a stroll on a fashionable street than a charge across No-Man's-Land.

We are showing it in a soft serge, the plaid worked up in dark green, with white satin collar and cuffs.

Sizes 34 to 40, at 25.00.

"Cravenette" finish ostrich feathers

that actually withstand dampness

"It's—it's fairly uncanny," declared a woman, inspecting a bright taupe plume that had just been subjected to a rather liberal sprinkling.

You know—every woman knows—what usually happens when an ostrich feather is caught in the rain.

It just naturally collapses, as far as curl is concerned.

But these new plumes—these "cravenette" finish plumes—actually seem to LIKE dampness. It is wonderful to think that they have been made possible, just when ostrich feathers are returning to high Fashion favor.

The "cravenetting" leaves no apparent trace—they are just as fine, just as soft, and just as exquisitely dyed in all the prevailing colors, as well as rich, lustrous black.

Every woman is invited to come in and see these wonderful plumes and tips, and ostrich bands for herself.

The Bamberger assemblage of fox neckpieces cannot be surpassed by any store in the metropolitan district. These wonderful skins were personally chosen by experts for the thickness of their furs and the exquisite beauty of their markings.

Our prices are very low, the rich, wonderful quality of these pieces considered. Autumn favorites are:

Kamchatka fox, a rich, dark brown, at 59.50 to 125.00.

Poiret fox, a soft tan-brown, at 55.00 to 125.00.

Taupe, a beautiful shade, at 35.00 to 85.00.

Georgette, a soft, bright gray, at 59.50 to 85.00.

Lucille, a rather light gray, at 55.00 to 85.00.

Others, all the wanted ones, at 17.98 to 75.00.

Muffs to perfectly match all shades, 39.75 to 75.00.

Successful Operation of a Co-operative Store in Washington.

One little neighborhood in the national capital has come nearer a true solution of the marketing question than many theorists. This community for the last four months has had in successful operation a genuine co-operative store. It deals as directly as possible with the producer on the one hand and the consumer on the other, eliminating as many of the middlemen as is feasible.

Co-operation is a fine theory, but difficult in practice. The manager in the Washington community store has overcome the practical difficulties.

Here's the way he started:

He demonstrated to his neighbors by actual figures that they were paying anywhere from $2 to $5 a week more for their groceries and supplies than they needed to. This represented the middlemen's profits.

He then proposed if a hundred families would pay him regularly 50 cents a week, he would undertake to supply them with garden truck, provisions, and meats at wholesale prices. To clinch the demonstration, he showed that an average family would save this 50 cents weekly fee in a couple of days' purchases.

This man had energy, persistence, and intelligence. The store has every prospect of increasing success.

There is no difference in appearance between a community store and any other provision store. There is no other difference in buying your food. The only difference is that you pay 50 cents a week on a certain day of each week and buy food for anywhere from 15 to 40 per cent. less than at the commercial, nonco-operative retail store.

Any one who fails to pay his dues may still buy, but at retail prices. Any one not a member of the store may buy, but at retail prices, the store making a profit.

At the end of certain stated periods any profit is divided among the dues-paying members.

Washington is particularly fortunate in being one of the few municipalities of the country which has a public city-owned market where the farmers can come with their produce and sell it direct to the consumers.

But the majority of the housewives of Washington, like the housewives throughout the United States, cannot buy directly from the producer. There is simply no machinery in existence for buying directly. To a small extent the parcel post solves this, but in my opinion not as successfully as the co-operative store.

The other day a Department of Agriculture investigator went to the Washington community store to make an experiment. He paid his 50 cents weekly membership and made some purchases. He bought a 10-cent carton of oatmeal for 8 cents, a 10-cent loaf of bread for 8 cents, one-half peck of string beans for 20 cents, as against 30 cents in the nonco-operative retail stores; three pounds of veal for 58 cents, instead of 60 cents; a half dozen oranges for 13 cents, instead of the usual price of 20 to 25 cents, and so on. His total purchases amounted to $1.82, and the estimated saving was 49 cents—within one cent of the entire weekly fee.

There is a movement now on foot in Washington to establish an association of co-operative stores on the model I have just described. This movement has my most hearty approval, and I think the enterprising people of every community should get down to brass tacks on this marketing proposition and go at it in the same common sense, practical way that has been done by one neighborhood in Washington.—Carl Vrooman in

NEW THEORY OF LIFE'S ORIGIN AND GROWTH

Prof. Henry Fairfield Osborn's "Energy Concept" a Radical Departure in Idea and Method from the Darwinian View of Evolution

THE ORIGIN AND EVOLUTION OF LIFE: On the Theory of Action, Reaction, and Interaction of Energy. By Henry Fairfield Osborn, Sc. D., Hon. LL. D., Hon. Ph. D., Research Professor of Zoology, Columbia University; Vertebrate Palaeontologist, United States Geological Survey; Curator Emeritus of Vertebrate Palaeontology in the American Museum of Natural History. Illustrated. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $3.

HERE is presented a new theory for the study of the origin and evolution of life, a new basis upon which to search for the answer to a question which has for many generations fascinated and baffled the mind of man. It is briefly given a name as the "energy concept"; more fully, it is a theory of action, reaction, and interaction of living energy. Perhaps the simplest introduction of the theory to the mind of the layman is contained in the following sentences:

> The evolution of life may be rewritten in terms of invisible energy, as it has long since been written in terms of visible form. All visible tissues, organs, and structures are seen to be the more or less simple or elaborate agents of the different modes of energy. One after another special groups of tissues and organs are created and co-ordinated—organs for the capture of energy from the inorganic environment and from the life environment, organs for the storage of energy, organs for the transformation of energy from the potential state into the states of motion and heat. Other agents of control are evolved to bring about a harmonious balance between the various organs and tissues in which energy is released, hastened or accelerated, slowed down or retarded, or actually arrested or inhibited.

But before we go on to a closer examination of the theory, with the detailed statement of "the complex of four interrelated sets of physicochemical energies" which Professor Osborn sets forth as the most fundamental biologic scheme or principle of development, it is well to take account of the really revolutionary quality of the eminent scientist's theory, in its presentation as a new mode of studying a problem in which other methods have failed.

The law of evolution itself has won its place in natural law, and has long since outgrown the rank of a theory, as Professor Osborn points out. We know that plants and animals and man "evolve"; we know to some extent how they evolve; we do not know why they evolve. For 150 years man's observation, experiment, and reasoning have not brought him near to the end of his search for causes of life and its development. Says Professor Osborn:

> It is best frankly to acknowledge that the chief causes of the orderly evolution of the germ are still entirely unknown, and that our search must take an entirely fresh start.

In presenting his own theory, the "energy conception," the scientist makes no claim of actual discovery in this field of the causes of life and evolution. But both the novel quality of his basis for search and his hope for ultimate success are summed up in the sentences which begin the preface to the book:

> In these lectures we may take some of the initial steps toward an energy conception of evolution and an energy conception of heredity, and away from the matter and form conceptions which have prevailed for over a century. * * *
> We are not ready for a clearly developed energy conception of the origin of life, still less of evolution and of heredity; yet we believe our theory of the actions, reactions, and interactions of living energy will prove to be a step in the right direction.

He goes on:

> In contrast to the unity of opinion on the law of evolution is the wide diversity of opinion on the causes of evolution. In fact, the causes of the evolution of life are as mysterious as the law of evolution is certain. Some contend that we already know the chief causes of evolution, others contend that we know little or nothing about them. In this open court of conjecture, of hypothesis, of more or less heated controversy, the great names of Lamarck, of Darwin, of Weismann figure prominently as leaders of different schools of opinion; while there are others, like myself, who for various reasons belong to no school, and are as agnostic about Lamarckism as they are about Darwinism or Weismannism, or the more recent form of Darwinism termed mutation by de Vries.
> In truth, from the period of the earliest stages of Greek thought man has been eager to discover some natural cause of evolution, and to abandon the idea of supernatural intervention in the order of nature. Between the appearance of "The Origin of Species," in 1859, and the present time there have been great waves of faith in one explanation and then in another; each of these waves of confidence has ended in disappointment, until finally we have reached a stage of very general skepticism. Thus the long period of observation, experiment, and reasoning which began with the French philosopher Buffon, 150 years ago, ends in 1916 with the general feeling that our search for causes, far from being near completion, has only just begun. * * *
> As regards the continuous adaptability and fitness of living things, we have a reasonable interpretation of the causes of some of the phenomena of adaptation, but they are the smaller part of the whole. Especially mysterious are the chief phenomena of adaptation in the germ; the marvelous and continuous fitness and beauty of form and function remain largely unaccounted for. We have no scientific explanation for those processes of development from within, which Bergson has termed "l'évolution créatrice," and for which Driesch has abandoned a natural explanation and assumed the existence of an entelechy, that is, an internal perfecting influence.
> This confession of failure is part of the essential honesty of scientific thought.
> Some scientists have been willing to accept this failure as final, to admit the origin of life and evolution to be "unknowable," or to assume an explanation, as does Driesch, on a more or less inclusive theory of an internal "perfecting influence." To neither of these classes does Professor Osborn belong. It may be stated at the outset that he finds "from palaeontology that there is positive disproof of the existence of an internal perfecting principle or entelechy of any kind which would impel animals to evolve in a given direction regardless of the direct, reversed, or alternating directions taken by the organism in seeking its life environment or physical environment." And the existence of the present volume is sufficient evidence, without opening it, that he does not give up the hope of solving the problem of causes! He has, instead, his explanation of the failure of research hitherto:

HENRY FAIRFIELD OSBORN

> The question then arises, Why has our long and arduous search after the causes of evolution so far been unsuccessful? One reason why our search may have failed appears to be that the chief explorers have been trained in one school of thought, namely, the school of the naturalist. * * * All the great naturalists in turn—Buffon, Goethe, Lamarck, Darwin, and de Vries—have attempted to reason backward, as it were, from the highly organized appearances of form and color to their causes. The same is true of the palaeontologists. * * *
> Moreover, all the explanations of evolution which have been offered by three generations of naturalists align themselves under two main ideas only. The first is the idea that the causes of evolution are chiefly from without inward, namely, beginning in the environment of the body and extending into the germ; this idea is centripetal. The second idea is just the reverse; it is centrifugal, namely, that the causes begin in the germ and extend outward into the body and into the environment. * * *
> If the naturalists have failed to make progress in the search for causes, I believe it is chiefly because they have attempted to reason backward from highly complex plant and animal forms to causes. The cart has always been placed before the horse; or, to express it in another way, thought has turned from the forms of living matter toward a problem which involves the phenomena of living energy; or, still more briefly, we have been thinking from matter backward into energy rather than from energy forward into matter and form.

Directly upon the problems of living energy, therefore, Professor Osborn focuses his research. In the lowliest forms of life form does not conceal the processes of energy as it does in the higher types. Study among the "early episodes of life in its origin" reveals the successive addition and combination of four complexes of energy: Inorganic Environment, the energy content in sun, earth, water, air; Organism, "the energy of the individual, developing and changing the cells and tissues of the body, including that part of the germ which enters every cell"; Heredity Germ, "the energies of the heredity-substance (heredity-chromatin) concentrated in the reproductive cells of continuous and successive generations, as well as in all the cells and tissues of the organism"; and Life Environment, beginning with the monads and algae and ascending in a developing scale of plants and animals. He goes on:

> There are here four evolutions of energy rather than one, and the problem of causes is how the four evolutions are adjusted to each other; and especially how the evolution of the germ adjusts itself to that of the inorganic environment and of the life environment, and to the temporary evolution of the organism itself. * * *
> Whether our approach through energy will lead to the discovery of some at least of the unknown causes of evolution remains to be determined by many years of observation and experiment. Whereas our increasing knowledge of energy in matter reveals an infinity of energized particles even in the infinitely minute aggregations known as molecules—an infinity which we observe but do not comprehend—we find in our search for causes of the origin and evolution of life that we have reached an entirely new point of departure, namely, that of the physicist and chemist rather than the old point of departure of the naturalist. We have obtained a starting point for new and untried paths of exploration which may be followed during the present century—paths which have long been trodden with a different purpose by physicists and chemists, and by physiologists and biochemists in the study of the organism itself.

The central theory developed in the scientist's speculation on the Origin of Life is "that every physicochemical action and reaction concerned in the transformation, conservation, and dissipation of energy produces also, either as a direct result or as a by-product, a physicochemical agent of interaction which permeates and affects the organism as a whole or affects only some special part."

His brief restatement of the complex of interrelated sets of physicochemical energies, "the most fundamental biologic scheme or principle of development," and the central thought of the present book, is as follows:

> In each organism the phenomena of life represent the action, reaction, and interaction of four complexes of physicochemical energy, those of the inorganic environment, the developing organism, the germ, and the life environment. Upon the resultant actions, reactions, and interactions of potential and kinetic energy in each organism selection is constantly operating wherever there is competition with the corresponding actions, reactions, and interactions of other organisms.

He adds:

> While this is a principle which largely governs the Organism, it remains to be discovered whether it also governs the causes of the Evolution of the Germ.

For the energy conception of the origin and evolution of life is as yet in its infancy. On it are based, as Dr. Osborn points out, fresh stimulus to experiment and renewed hope of progress. It may be claimed for the theory of action, reaction, and interaction that it brings us "somewhat nearer to a consistent physicochemical conception of the original processes of life."

In conclusion he also states:

> Being still at the very beginning of the problem of the causes of germ evolution—a problem which has aroused curiosity and baffled inquiry throughout the ages—it were idle to entertain or present any settled conviction in regard to it, yet we cannot avoid expressing as our present opinion that these causes are internal-external rather than purely internal—in other words, that some kind of relation exists between the actions, reactions, and interactions of the germ, of the organism, and of the environment. Moreover, this opinion is probably capable of experimental proof or disproof.

The main body of the book is in two parts: The Adaptation of Energy and the Evolution of Animal Form. The first part takes up the Preparation of the Earth for Life, the Sun, and the Physicochemical Origins of Life, and the Energy Evolution of Bacteria; Algae, and Plants. The theory of action, reaction, and interaction is here set forth. In the second part the chapters are upon the Origins of Animal Life and Evolution of the Invertebrates, Visible and Invisible Evolution of the Vertebrates, Evolution of Body Form in Fishes and Amphibians, Form Evolution of the Reptiles and Birds, and Evolution of the Mammals. The second part, in comparing the evolutionary development that has taken place in many series of animals in response to five different kinds of environment, gives repeated evidence of their "continuous powers of everplastic adaptation, not only to one kind of physical and life environment, but to any direct, reversed, or alternating change of environment which a group of animals may encounter either on its own initiative or by force of circumstances." In a future volume Professor Osborn will take up prehuman ancestry and evolution.

COL. ROOSEVELT ON FOES OF OUR OWN HOUSEHOLD

THE FOES OF OUR OWN HOUSEHOLD. By Theodore Roosevelt. New York: George H. Doran Company. $1.50.

THIS twelve papers composing this book appeared originally in the Outlook or the Metropolitan Magazine during this present year and are here gathered into book form by Colonel Roosevelt as a compact presentation of some of the evils in our national life for whose eradication the best thoughts and energies of our people will be necessary. Some of the papers deal with matters connected with the war and with the duties of all good citizens in the country's present need. But most of them are concerned with problems, customs, tendencies, that existed before the war and which must be faced and their difficulties made straight if our progress in democracy is not to be halted. In his foreword Colonel Roosevelt sums up in these words the foes within our country from whom our national life and ideals have much to fear:

> In the long run we have less to fear from foes without than from foes within; for the former will be formidable only as the latter break our strength. The men who oppose preparedness in our military and industrial life; the business or political corruptionist or reactionary and the reckless demagogue who is his nominal opponent; the man of wealth and greed who cares for nothing but profits, and the sinister creature who plays upon and inflames the passions of envy and violence; the hard materialist, the self-indulgent lover of ease and pleasure, and the silly sentimentalist—all these are the permanent foes of our own household. From their ranks are drawn our immediate foes; the faint-hearted who fear Germany, the puzzle-headed who refuse to understand her, and the men of foul soul who do her evil bidding.

In his thinking upon national affairs Colonel Roosevelt, as is well known, is always a partisan, and therefore it is, perhaps, to be expected that in these papers he would seize upon every opportunity to cudgel the present conduct of the Government. The diligence with which he berates the President and his advisers and the frequency with which he airs his own personal grievance bring vividly to mind the incessant fault-finding and the determined attempts to rouse anti-Administration feeling of some of the men in public life during the civil war—activities which, while they allowed individuals to blow off a certain amount of steam, yet added deplorably to the heavy burdens of President Lincoln, and harassed and hindered the prosecution of the war. It is very much to be regretted that Colonel Roosevelt was not better advised than to give permanence to some of his criticisms. For they deal with crises left behind us, and, however sincere they were at that time, insistence upon them now can do no good whatever, while it may do much evil.

For its tendency is to foster and increase distrust and disapproval of the Government's conduct of the war, and consequently to lessen the unanimity and enthusiasm of its popular support. It plays into the hands of our enemies, since it persuades them that the country is not united, and leads them to believe that our war preparations are inefficient and futile, and therefore braces them to further effort. The inevitable result of such an attitude as Colonel Roosevelt takes in many of his pages, since he is a man of great prominence and influence, will be the slaughter of numbers of our young men whose lives otherwise would not have been lost.

These blots are the greater pity because they mar a book that in its far greater part is intensely patriotic, devoted to the betterment of American life, helpful and important. The earlier chapters voice an impassioned appeal to all Americans, men, women, and children, to take up each his or her own share of the burden of the war and do whatever work is possible with zeal and efficiency. His lashes with indignation all those, "whether Senators, Congressmen, editors, or professed humanitarians," who continue to champion Germany's cause, and tells them they are moral if not legal traitors and have no right longer to be treated as American citizens. A chapter on "The Children of the Crucible" ends with these wise words:

> The wisest and quickest way to Americanize the immigrant is to make him understand that here in America we have at last waked up to our needs, and that henceforth every man, whether born here or abroad, owes this country the fullest service of body and soul.

One chapter is devoted to a comparison of the characters, in their public capacity, of Washington and Lincoln. A long chapter on "Industrial Justice" lays down this basic proposition:

> Let me again repeat that industrial democracy does not mean handing over the control of matters requiring expert knowledge to masses of men who lack that knowledge; and therefore it does mean that it cannot come until the men in the ranks have sufficient self-knowledge and self-control to accept and demand expert leadership as part of the necessary division of labor. If democracy, whether in industry or politics, refuses to employ experts, it will simply show that it is unfit to survive. At the outset, at least, the share of the workers in control would not be on the business side proper of the management, but over the conditions of daily work—the essentially human side of the industrial process.

An article called "Social Justice" expounds the organization, aims, and achievements of the Municipal Court of Philadelphia—Colonel Roosevelt calls it "the brotherly court"—and praises it as deserving the study and cordial support of all who wish to do something toward bringing about the conditions of social justice. Especially lucid and cogent is the paper on "Socialism versus Social Reform," which deserves to be commended to the notice of all convinced Socialists and of all who have begun to think that there may be "something in socialism." While recognizing the high personal character, fine ideals, and useful service of many "self-styled Socialists," Colonel Roosevelt shows that those who pride themselves upon being thoroughgoing Socialists often are bad citizens. He examines the basic principles of socialism, says that even if we reject the philosophy we must recognize the evils of the present system and make the utmost endeavor to eliminate them. Toward this end he offers some pertinent suggestions. Among the other subjects dealt with is an account of the remarkable work for country life betterment done by an organization in North Carolina, a chapter on the work of women, and another on birth reform from the positive side.

MANUALS OF WARFARE

FIELD ENTRENCHMENTS. A Manual of Trench Warfare Based on Official Manuals. By an Engineer Officer. Edited by E. John Solano. Illustrated. New York: National Military Publishing Company. $1.

NEW MANUAL OF BAYONET TRAINING AND PRACTICAL BAYONET FIGHTING. From the Official Regulations. Illustrated. New York: National Military Publishing Company. 75 cents.

BAYONET FIGHTING. By Captain Leopold McLaglen. Illustrated. New York: National Military Publishing Company. 75 cents.

THE JUNIOR PLATTSBURG MANUAL. By Captains E. B. Garey and G. O. Ellis. Foreword by Major Gen. John F. O'Ryan. Illustrated. New York: The Century Company. $1.50.

THESE four manuals of warfare and of training have all received the commendation of authority and the methods they expound have passed the test of experience. That on "Field Entrenchments," written by an engineer officer attached to the staff of the British Army, lays down the broad principles in accordance with which that army has been trained and has carried on its fighting at the front. Instructors are cautioned to remember that only general principles and broad rules can be dealt with in training, since conditions are likely to change frequently and suddenly in the course of a campaign. Copious illustrations, diagrams, and plans clarify the text, and an appendix contains explanations of technical terms, a summary of the general points of the work, and much practical exposition dealing with tools, materials, working parties, and gun efficiency. The chief subjects covered in the body of the book are spadework for riflemen, hasty fire cover, fire trenches, communications, concealment, obstruction, and shelters.

The manual dealing with the use of the bayonet contains the regulations in force in the new armies of the Entente Allies and adopted at Plattsburg and other American camps. Half the book is devoted to instruction by lessons arranged in order, and the second half deals with the general principles of practical bayonet warfare with service rifle and bayonet, with a recapitulation at the end of the order of the lessons. Photographs and drawings illustrate the positions taken in using the bayonet.

Captain McLaglen has invented a system of bayonet fighting which has many new features and somewhat revolutionizes the systems formerly in vogue. In his little book he makes a condensed textual description of the methods he has devised, and accompanies the text with a hundred or more plates illustrating the positions described. In the introduction Captain McLaglen tells why he made the studies which resulted in the working out of this system and what the features are which make it superior to the old system. It contains, he says, a good deal of jiu-jitsu, which enables a small and comparatively weak man to best one much his superior in strength, while in both attack and defense it has features which make it more dangerous to the enemy.

"The Junior Plattsburg Manual" is planned for boys along similar lines to those of the "Plattsburg Manual," by the same authors, the men. It is intended for use in boys' camps and in high schools and other educational institutions where military training is given, and also for the individual boy or young man who wants to acquire the elements of military training. Its purpose is not so much the making of young soldiers as it is the training of bodies, minds, and morals along straight and upright lines and the helping to build the foundations of a sound body and a good character. The authors are both graduates of West Point, both have given military training to boys and young men in various colleges, and both have been instructors at Plattsburg. In his foreword General O'Ryan points out the need for such a work and commends the manner in which Captains Garey and Ellis have met that need. The abundant illustrations are made more useful by the fact that some of them show the wrong as well as the right way of doing the things described in the text.

MR. GERARD'S STORY OF HIS MISSION IN GERMANY

MY FOUR YEARS IN GERMANY. By James W. Gerard. Illustrated. New York: George H. Doran Company. $2.

NEVER did a people of this earth turn to any terra incognita such puzzled and wondering eyes, so eager for information, as Americans have turned upon Germany ever since the beginning of this war. For the Germany that has been revealed is so unlike the Germany that any one knew or believed or imagined that even in the face of all the evidence it has been difficult to accept as true. And therefore all accounts of personal observation and experience inside of Germany during the last three years have had immediate welcome from a people who wanted to know above all else the truth about the real Germany. Now here for their information comes an authoritative book by a man whose opportunities of knowing were most exceptional—a book showing that he improved those opportunities to the utmost.

For many reasons "My Four Years in Germany" is a remarkable book, more remarkable than one might reasonably expect it to be. It is not too much to say that probably no diplomat heretofore ever wrote quite such a variously interesting record of his service as this. Mr. Gerard was an interested observer of everything that was to be seen; he participated with zest in every experience that came his way; with the stiffest kind of a backbone he defended American rights and demanded their recognition. And he proves himself as good a reporter as observer, so that his lively narrative is as fascinating as a record of things seen and done as it is significant as an account of German conditions and temperament and important as diplomatic history. Nothing that could help Americans to form a true picture of German life and character was too small for him to see and chronicle, and in its broad scope his book includes accounts of conditions among workingmen, as well as conversations with the Kaiser, of prison camps as well as court functions, of German appetite for food as well as diplomatic negotiations.

All this variety gives the book, inevitably, a certain scrappiness of effect, but vastly increases its interest and value as a report upon another nation. Its report, by necessity, is one of superficial observation. Mr. Gerard nowhere makes pretense of profound study of the German people or their affairs. He moved about much, saw many parts of the country, observed scenes of the greatest variety, met large numbers of people of many different classes. The extent and variety of his observations excite the reader's admiration and, since he saw so much, his careful, matter of fact, judicially minded, reporter-like account is more interesting, more informing, more important than if he had tried to philosophize upon it and give it an air of profundity.

Mr. Gerard recounts separately various phases of his activities and observations so that one can take up almost any chapter of his book and read it with satisfaction apart from the others. Most people will turn first to those parts dealing with his diplomatic negotiations, with the German officials, with the American exodus at the beginning of the war, and the departure of the embassy last Spring. No good American can read these chapters without a thrill of pride and of thankfulness that this nation was represented in Germany at that time by a man of such sturdy Americanism and dogged resolution as Mr. Gerard's modest account shows him to have been. It is evident that he was just the kind of man for the situation the Germans made, and that he filled that situation up to the top and running over in almost every case, just as his fellow-countrymen would like it to be filled. When he told the Foreign Office that if an insult to this country, hung by the League of Truth in a conspicuous place, was not removed he would go with a moving picture operator and take it down himself; when he told the Chancellor that he would sit in the street in front of his office until attention was paid to a proposition about the war prisoners; when he asked von Jagow what they could do to him if he shot some of the police dogs in one of the prison camps; when he told Zimmermann that there was a lamp-post in America for every German here who would rise against this country; when he told the Foreign Office that he would stay there "until hell freezes over" before he would sign the treaty his signature to which had been made the condition to the embassy's safe conduct out of the country—and in every case got what he wanted, the reader is inspired with the wish to break into applause.

Much is already known of Mr. Gerard's sterling work as Ambassador, but the detailed story of it which he tells here, with all its background of immediate conditions, sidelights upon officials, and illuminating incident ought to be read by every American, for it throws a veritable searchlight upon the German Government and the nature of its methods, and the people of this country need nothing quite so much as they need to know the truths it reveals.

There is hardly a page throughout the book but fairly cries out for reference or quotation, so interesting is it all. But it is possible in a review only to snatch at something here and there. For instance, there is that unforgettable picture of Mr. Gerard's audience with the Emperor in October, 1915, in which the Kaiser displayed intense bitterness against America—he had been for six months refusing to receive the American Ambassador—and said to him, "America had better look out after this war," and "I shall stand no nonsense from America after the war."

Noteworthy is Mr. Gerard's report of his observations on the living and working conditions of German workmen. Americans have heard much about the socialistic laws ostensibly for their protection and the betterment of their lives. But he found the German workman the worst exploited of any workman in the world and bound by those laws to his employer as securely as any serf in the Middle Ages was bound to his master's estate. At the end of the book, speaking of the causes of the war, he says:

> It is because in the dark, cold, northern plains of Germany there exists an autocracy, deceiving a great people, poisoning their minds from one generation to another, and preaching the virtue and necessity of war; and until that autocracy is either wiped out or made powerless there can be no peace on earth. * * * And there must be no German peace. The old régime, left in control of Germany, of Bulgaria, of Turkey, would only seek a favorable moment to renew the war, to strive again for the mastery of the world. Fortunately America bars the way—America, led by a fighting President who will allow no compromise with brutal autocracy.

The volume is interestingly illustrated with reproductions from photographs and with many facsimiles of documents, among them the famous letter by cable of the Kaiser to President Wilson soon after the beginning of the war, to which Mr. Gerard has given its first publicity.

LADY DUFFERIN'S JOURNALS

MY RUSSIAN AND TURKISH JOURNALS. By Dowager Marchioness of Dufferin and Ava. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons.

LADY DUFFERIN'S splendid and picturesque career as the wife of the late Marquess of Dufferin and Ava renders the appearance of another volume in the vein of "My Canadian Journal" a gratifying event to readers on both sides of the Atlantic. The journal letters which are reproduced with comparatively slight change in this book were written during that most interesting period of Lord Dufferin's ambassadorial life, the five years at Petrograd and Constantinople prior to his appointment to the Viceroyalty of India in 1884. However, they contain no direct allusion to the diplomatic procedure of the portentous years in international history that saw the formation of the Triple Alliance. Lady Dufferin chats brightly and amusingly of the social life in the embassies and of her duties as Ambassadress, of personal experiences and impressions of personages. Prince Gorchakov, for instance, whose name is associated with so much of historical interest, appears in these pages in the rôle of "a charming old man of 84, full of the grossest flatteries, expressed in the most delightful manner." With democratic upheaval in the atmosphere at Petrograd, the author is in despair over the dress question through the perpetual fear of mourning. But she writes, "In Russia one seems much nearer to history than at home."

It is difficult to convey an adequate idea of the delicately archaic flavor of these letters from a period presenting such a sharp contrast to the present one in Russia and Turkey. Their chief interest, however, is in the brightly reflected personality of a gracious lady who inspired intense devotion within a wide circle. Lady Dufferin moves serenely through the pageantries of ambassadorial life, mingling in her chronicle with unstudied effect the stately and the homely. En route for Petrograd, at Berlin, she receives a flattering but unexpected visit from Prince Bismarck, whose "deliberate manner" of speech causes her to feel a little anxious about the time, an audience with the Emperor and Empress having been granted for that afternoon. Lord Dufferin had, however, "the happy thought to send and tell me that the carriage was at the door, and then my visitor picked up his shining helmet and left." The record of two brilliant Russian years with a sombre background is brought to an impressive conclusion with the letters describing the funeral ceremonies of the assassinated Czar Alexander, of whom the reader is afforded a glimpse. Of the service in the palace the author relates one striking effect. In the midst of the concluding rite, the priest reading from the Gospel in a monotonous voice as the imperial family walked out, the soldiers outside were heard greeting the new Emperor. "They all say together some sentence; it has the effect of a cheer."

In their stronger individu lit., the Turkish journal letters are the more interesting. Lady Dufferin played a particularly bright part in the social life of Constantinople during her years at the embassy, receiving as a mark of high favor the Order of the Chefakat from the Sultan, Abdul Hamid. She writes inimitably of Turkish ladies and Turkish weddings, of receptions and visits, of Winter entertainments and charity bazaars—and of a Christmas-tree fête for the relief of the destitute Jews. There is, also, a vidid picture of the Cairo of the '80s that will appeal to the traveled reader.

By HORST VON DER GOLTZ

For ten years Captain von der Goltz was a secret agent of Imperial Germany. In this remarkable book he tells the story of his career, from the time when, by the innocent discovery of a compromising letter from a member of the Hohenzollern family, he was plunged into the whirlpool of secret diplomacy until the day in 1916 when he was released from a British prison and sent to testify in plots against the United States. There are twelve chapters, each one filled with incidents as dramatic as any in romance. There are accounts of intrigues in Europe, some of them thrilling, some amusing, many of these momentous, but all of them full of the fascination of real adventure.

And there are revelations of German activities in this country that are going to hit home to the heart of every true American. Capt. von der Goltz knew the German program and he tells the full story of German intrigue against the United States as no other man has been able to tell it.

explains this at some length and attributes the superiority of the British forces over the German to the fact that one is an army of sportsmen taking to a new sport as a duck does to water, while the other is an army of men who view fighting as a business.

You are half through the middle chapters before you realize how steadily all that has seemed careless and overdone is carrying on toward an overwhelming sense of the kind of soldier who is doing the fighting and paying the price. Then nothing is clearer than the scene on which the "Sapper" has raised the curtain; the stage filled with hundreds of thousands of boys playing their practical jokes as they played them a few years ago on their schoolmates; talking an almost unreadable but strictly coherent jargon of slang and Johnsonian English, inventing new instruments of torture as they invented wireless devices in attics and barns in their recent childhood; enduring inconceivable discomforts with a sporting spirit; frightened and brave, and brought up to their best by their trainers, the officers who rightly discharge their responsibility to their men; finally dying and seeing their comrades die with the lesson learned that "it's better to die a man than live a worm."

The "Sapper" has not stopped with defining a type. He has insisted upon our knowing what the individuals composing the type have to go through with before they are out of it. What they have to go through with bears but a faint resemblance to the "sports" in which they had their training; and nothing is spared. The smallest details, a smile on a face that has been shot to pieces, are marshaled in the cause of realism. The "Sapper" again explains, and his accusing emphasis is an echo of the bitterness in thousands of young hearts:

> You bring in a crowd of men whose sole qualification in August, 1914, to be considered soldiers was an intense national love of games. You pit them against a machine perfect in technique, in which every part had been trained from earliest infancy to the trade of soldiering, and the trade of ruthless killing. You ask them to go across the water and beat this machine for you. And so if I harry you at times with details of the blood-curdling type it is only that you may understand something of the nature of the task; the task which your brothers and sons and partners and clerks are carrying to a successful issue.

"No Man's Land" is a strange, ill-written, confused and vivid book, pulled out of the frightful turmoil of the present. It is not art, but material for art, and that, just now, is better.

ZELLA SEES HERSELF

ZELLA SEES HERSELF. By E. M. Delafield. New York: Alfred A. Knopf. $1.50.

THE histrionic temperament is not exclusively the possession of stage people. In a delightful satire on actors Anatole France has shown how completely their simulation of unfelt emotions has inhibited their capacity to experience genuine ones. As a matter of fact this emotional masquerading is well-nigh universal. We play up to situations according to the stray fictional standards inured in us by indiscriminate reading; we do what we think people would like us to do; we attitudinize and conciliate and repeat artificialities in which we do not believe, all because we are eternally anxious to do the "right" thing. Our inner eye is always on ourselves; we are constantly posing—no more genuine than manikins.

From the time she is 7 years old Zella de Kervoyou, the heroine of this remarkable novel by E. M. Delafield, is constantly shifting her standards to conform to those of the particular environment in which she happens to find herself. The book is practically the story of the lies, the evasions, the hypocrisies, the heartaches which spring from Zella's desire to be always charming, agreeable, superior. Like most people, there is nothing focal in her scheme of life; she hasn't the faintest notion of what really constitutes superiority; all that animates her is a craving for the titillation of momentary approval. To get that she must prove herself superior according to the criterions of superiority the particular environment in which she finds herself. So, when she comes in contact with the empty and insincere Anglican piety of her aunt, Mrs. Lloyd-Evans, she tries to conceal her inherent antipathy to that ideal, later in a convent she makes herself ridiculous by emulating the self-mortification of the saints, always with the idea of drawing attention to herself, "to go the Catholics one better." Incidentally she embraces the Catholic religion with no deeper motive than to draw the attention and the solicitude of the Reverend Mother. She forgets the convent and religion when she leaves it, however, and there comes a phase in which she falls under the spell of Alison St. Craye, Theosophist and "serious thinker"—a sort of sublimated Hermione. Zella deludes herself into believing that she cares for art, but it is only Alison's friendship that she wants. Finally she comes near marrying a romantic ass simply because he makes her feel "like a person in a play." Only the intervention of her sincere and common-sense cousin, James Lloyd-Evans, saves her.

A paragraph taken from Zella's review of her life at the end of the book epitomizes her story:

> Then had come her convent days. Alien standards again and a passior attempt to contort her vision to the level of her surroundings. It was not religion that she had craved, not the faith that was the whole solution to the riddle of life for those who held it; but the personal sympathy, and the human comfort of affection from those with whom her path had lain for such a very little way. * * * Had it been worth while?

And that is the note on which the book closes. You are left wondering whether Zella will ever really overcome her moral invertebracy, achieve genuineness and sincerity.

This unusual and complex study of character is told with a lightness and mastery of touch and a delightful, pervasive humor not often met in the ordinary run of novels. All the characters are clearly limned, but one or two—the old Baronne, Zella's French grandmother, and Mrs. Lloyd-Evans, with her way of uttering the most hackneyed platitudes as though they were personal contributions to human knowledge—are as much full-length portraits as that of Zella herself. This novel by a new writer is not a promise, but a considerable achievement.

PIANG

PIANG: THE MORO JUNGLE BOY. By Florence Partello Stuart. Illustrated. The Century Co. $1.35 net.

THE average American citizen knows almost as much—or as little—about those particular possessions of the United States, the Philippine Islands, as he does about Afghanistan. Wherefore any book which will to any appreciable extent increase his knowledge of those wards of his country is to be welcomed with joy for that reason alone, quite apart from any literary merit it may have. And these tales of "Piang: The Moro Jungle Boy" are packed full of information about the customs, beliefs and way of living of the Moros, who, as the author reminds us in a brief preface, are not Filipinos, but one of the innumerable tribes, each of which inhabits some one of the "several thousand little islands in the Philippine group." Moreover, the extraordinary adventures which befell Piang, though interwoven with fiction, are declared to be based on fact.

And those adventures are quite exciting enough to rejoice the heart of any normal boy. In the very first one Piang sets forth on a perilous journey to the mountain where dwells an ancient hermit and wise man, Ganassi, who alone is able to decide whether Piang or Sicto, the half-breed, is the one chosen by Allah to be the "charm boy" of the tribe ruled by old Dato Kali Pandapatan. A fight with crocodiles, a struggle for life on a floating island, and an escape from the pursuing Sicto which leads through a terrible cave where the souls of the wicked, according to the Moro belief, await the day of judgment, are some of the incidents which help to enliven the trip. Later Piang leads his tribe to victory in warfare, crowned with the buds of the fire tree. Then come the white men, the Americans, and a bandana handkerchief and a pocket mirror are wonders which fairly enchant Piang. But here as always Sicto the defeated is his rival, and this time nearly entraps him—so nearly that the only possible way of escape is by riding a cataract, which Piang forthwith proceeds to do. Presently he makes friends with the American soldiers, and proves extremely useful to them. Had it not been for him, they never would have found the sunken gunboats, and a "juramentado" might have made a terrible end to the festivities of the "bichara"; in short, Piang's existence could scarcely be called a monotonous one. The tales are entertaining, and the author's evident familiarity with these little-known people makes them something more than a mere source of amusement.

WOLF-LURE

WOLF-LURE. By Agnes and Egerton Castle. Illustrated. D. Appleton & Co.

THE strange, barbaric title of this latest adventure story by these popular authors amply suggests the wild, exotic scenes enacted about Castle Roxac of Guyenne, not long after the old French régime came to an abrupt downfall under the "Corsican upstart." The tale consists of the reminiscences of an elderly Englishman, who in youth wandered into this out-of-the-way part of France for the sake of historical study and research. The action, which is extravagant, though doubtless appropriate to the times and the setting, takes one into the midst of a passion-taunted castle, into the territory of a race of ruffians and counterfeiters, and even down to the subterranean caves in the back waters of the Tarn. Yet the story is surprisingly void of really "palpitating moments." This is due, perhaps, to a certain loquacity on the part of the narrator that detracts from the point and force of the tale by endeavoring to spread tone and atmosphere by means of long descriptive passages, totally unnecessary and wearisome. Even the dialogue, sometimes of irritating length, goes too far in furnishing background and local color. The characters, though hardly realistic or convincing, are, nevertheless, vivid and drawn with bold, loose strokes. As with the unhappy Charles, Louvcelle seems to us ever "wild, dew-fresh, sunset colored—Diana of the Hills"; and Loup-Cervier, her fortu-

Author of "EMPTY POCKETS."

Philadelphia Press: "Mr. Hughes's delightfully readable and epigrammatic style gallops the reader through his more than six hundred pages without a trace of fatigue. The story has admirable balance, but at the same time is a marvel of speed in production, for it is brought right down to the entrance of the United States into the war. The notable distinction of being the foremost interpreter of modern metropolitan life belongs unquestionably to Mr. Hughes."

Henry Blackman Sell in The Chicago News says: "I enjoyed this novel. It tells a good story, hits off a neat list of United States foibles, and provides a convincing, logical, happy ending. The writing has that hard, snappy, caustic, 'wise,' well read, serious to comic to serious in a breath quality that belongs exclusively and only to this patch of the world."

N. Y. Times: "Mr. Hughes's stories always rush along with a snap, a spirit, a go that make them beguiling companions. They read as if they had been written with zest and with a good-humored, cynical amusement at the ironies of life. This new story has these qualities in a degree even stronger than usual, and there is never a let-down in them, notwithstanding the more than six hundred pages which it fills."

LATEST WORKS OF FICTION

FANNY HERSELF. By Edna Ferber. Illustrated. Frederick A. Stokes Company. $1.40 net.

IN the amusing preface to her new novel, Miss Ferber declares that she would not be at all surprised if Molly Brandeis should turn out to be the real heroine of the book, instead of "Fanny Herself." And this is precisely what happens, although the portion of the book in which Mrs. Brandeis appears is to a great extent but an introduction to the main story, and she is presently removed from the scene, leaving the centre of the stage to Fanny. With her exit the interest of the novel sags noticeably, and from that moment steadily declines, growing less and less as the tale approaches its conclusion. For Fanny, too, is a far more attractive person in what may be fairly called the first half of the story, as the emotional little girl and the devoted daughter, than she is as the "super-woman" who galvanized into life the half-dead infants' wear department of the great Chicago mail-order house, and was able to draw cartoons so extraordinarily well that "there wasn't a woman cartoonist in the country—or man either, for that matter—who could touch" this remarkable Fanny Brandeis.

The first part of this new book is as human, as delightful, and as vividly real as anything Miss Ferber has ever done. The scene is laid in the little town of Winnebago, Wis. There Molly Brandeis came, with her incompetent husband and two children, some years before the story begins, and there he opened the general store called "Brandeis' Bazaar." It was during these years of her husband's lifetime that Molly Brandeis learned "the things one should not do in business, from watching Ferdinand Brandeis do them all." And when he died and she found herself obliged to take hold she did it vigorously, determined to wrest a living for herself and her two children out of the store that was losing money, not making it. She succeeded—succeeded by dint of the hardest kind of hard work, at a cost of nerves and energy that exhausted her before she was really old. A brave, shrewd, tolerant, intelligent woman, as big-hearted and humor-loving as her dear friend, Mrs. Emma McChesney, she quickly wins the reader's affection and respect and never loses either of them. From the moment when, with one drastic action, she settles the fate of the green-and-blue plush album, she has all our attention, and it is with a thrill of eager anxiety that we go with her on that first, all-important buying trip. The relations between the mother and the emotional, clever daughter, and of both with the small town in which they lived, are drawn deftly and with a real understanding. In the little Jewish community of Wisconsin, Molly Brandeis lost caste when she took up her husband's business. That did not worry her much, but Fanny resented it for her—resented that and a good many other things. The little Jewish community, the small town itself, are made entirely actual to us; with a touch here and a touch there we are given the very essence and flavor of Winnebago, but always the central figure is dear Molly Brandeis.

In what can be called the second part of the book, Fanny goes to Chicago, and there is an interesting account of the big Haynes-Cooper mail order establishment. Fanny has decided to live her life on a very different basis from her mother's, and begins by denying her Jewish origin. But she has the instinctive understanding of suffering and sympathy with it which she owes to her inheritance from persecuted generations, and these interfere greatly with her plans. Of course, a love affair is presently introduced, and after a regrettable bit of melodrama we leave Fanny enlightened and happy. Apart from the account of the Haynes-Cooper business, this section of the book is not any too interesting. There are several extremely long descriptions of Chicago and New York, and the hero indulges in more than one lecture. But Molly Brandeis, a woman near akin to the well-known Mrs. Emma McChesney, is at once thoroughly good and thoroughly likable. We see her dealing tactfully with her many trying customers, hearing confidences of every possible description by the big stove in her little store, reading Balzac and Zola in her few spare moments, watching with understanding eyes Fanny's struggle during the memorable Day of Atonement. A very real, not easily forgotten person, it is she who, with the little town of Winnebago, Wis., makes this story of "Fanny Herself" worth while.

THE CREAM OF THE JEST

THE CREAM OF THE JEST. By James Branch Cabell. Robert M. McBride & Co. $1.35 net.

MR. CABELL'S novel is subtitled "A Comedy of Evasions" and it is perhaps as well to remark at once that it is not a book for the prosaic, the literal-minded, and those who require their i's dotted and their t's crossed. People who have a great respect for gas and none at all for moonshine, for whom half-shades are non-existent and dreams mere nonsense, will do well to pass it by. For it is partly a tale of irony, partly a parable, partly an account of one man's adventures in that faërie land of dreams and desires and aspirations whither most persons whose imaginations have not been strangled journey every now and then. The external life of Felix Kennaston, so Richard Harrowby, supposed writer of the book, tells us, is to be found in a "Biography"; what he proposes to do is to give us Kennaston's own explanation of the change that came over him, the change which was revealed by the appearance of his famous romance, "Men Who Loved Alison."

"Alison" she was called in the printed volume, but Kennaston knew her as Ettarre, the perfect lady whom all men loved, and who bore upon her breast the talisman he called "the sigel of Scotela." And the book relates how for Kennaston the "Wardens of Earth" unbarred one of their "strange windows," so that he was able to see many things to which other people's eyes were blind, and with Ettarre had glimpses of many lands and many ages. For Ettarre is the deathless ideal, Helen of Troy and Iseult and Antigone, the dream woman and goddess men adore and think to wed, only to find that she is the forever unattainable. In his dreams Kennaston was a very different person from the "pudgy, pasty man" other men disliked, who lived in Litchfield and had two motors; and presently he began to ask himself, "Why is a Kennaston?" to perceive the lack of symmetry in the universe, and to regard life as a struggle toward "an ordered living" such as was to be found only in the novels people tried to make their lives resemble.

Comments of many kinds and upon all sorts of subjects are scattered through the book, some of them ironic and most of them interesting. Kennaston's experiences with publishers are amusing, and so is his meeting with the "multifarious personage" who held a mirror in his hand and always stood behind a megaphone. This novel of Mr. Cabell's is rather out of the ordinary—one of those books which make one feel that it was written because the author more than enjoyed, actually loved, writing it. A sympathetic study of one man, who, in that he dwelt within "inadequate flesh" and therefore must unavoidably "fail in the dream's service," represents all men, the book is interesting and something more than entertaining.

NO MAN'S LAND

NO MAN'S LAND. By "Sapper." New York: George H. Doran Company. $1.25.

THIS is a book that may be read in a library chair, in the subway, at an office desk, at restaurant tables during the waits, by men and women experienced in suffering and by those new to emotional crises, and it will bring to each reader an awakening stab of realization of what this individual war is to the individual soldier. That is the author's idea, to make a picture of the individual's part in the war, and he dedicates his book to the infantryman "who has saved the world."

His picture is a curious arrangement of apparently unrelated patches. It is grim, coarse, sentimental, beautiful, gay, solemn and trifling by turns, but, as a whole, undeniably convincing. The large proportion of elaborate boyish persiflage, trite sentiment, clumsy humor, jejune philosophy, and young scorn of superiors in office and the outer world generally, help to make it convincing. You read a passage of a hundred and fifty words or more dedicated to asking for a requisition for a dozen planks, and you are doubtful until you remember how much the reticent English talk among themselves. You worry through a chapter on the efforts of a cubist to achieve camouflage and ask yourself whether the men who could perceive an exquisite humor in the descriptions are yet out of school. Then you suddenly remember that most of them are not, that the army ranks are full of boys who have brought their sport-loving minds to bear on the great game of killing. The "Sapper"

NOTABLE BOOKS IN BRIEF REVIEW

the nineteen separate chapters wherein he expounds his philosophy, Mr. Fairbanks has also a good deal to say about the attainment of success.

In the first place, he points out with emphasis, (the book bristles with italics,) happiness is fundamentally a state of mind, not a state of body. "And mind controls." The initial direction, according to Mr. Fairbanks's recipe, is just to laugh. It makes no difference whether there is anything to laugh at. "Start off the morning with a laugh and you needn't worry about the rest of the day." He adds: "The man who has laughed his way through life has nothing to fear of the future. His conscience is clear."

Then comes exercise. It is a good thing to "trot yourself around the block a few times." Activity, he adds, makes for happiness as nothing else will. Throughout the book there is great stress laid on exercise. "It should become a part of our daily scheme to obey certain simple rules which tend toward an automatic effort instead of a discipline, and we should persevere in these until they become fixed habits." Cleanliness must never be forgotten. "Cleanliness stands paramount in its importance to success." But after these rules and admonitions of physical "preparedness" come the words of advice, no less decisively urged, for moral discipline, cleanliness, the general condition of being morally "fit." And the mind must be cultivated and kept alert. Here are some of his suggestions:

> All truly great men have been healthy. * * * The prime necessity of life is health. With this, for mankind nothing is impossible. But if we do not make use of this good health it will waste itself away and never come back. * * * A little "pep"—and we laugh and live.
> In taking stock of ourselves we should not forget that fear plays a large part in the drama of failure. That is the first thing to be dropped.
> We should get into the habit of reading inspirational books, looking at inspirational pictures, hearing inspirational music, associating with inspirational friends, and, above all, we should cultivate the habit of thinking clean, and of doing wholesome things. "Guard thyself!" That is the slogan. Let us "take stock" often and see where we stand. We will not be afraid of the weak points. We will get after them and get hold of ourselves at the same time.
> This dynamo called the mind can be trained to do anything.
> Just as the straight line is the shortest distance between two points, so honesty is the only proper attitude of one person toward another. * * * Its cultivation should become a part of our earliest education. * * * It is the one quality with which to crown our highest attributes. * * * Honesty does not grow naturally out of a dull, uninspired life. It goes with the energetic, the forceful. * * * The mere cultivation of laughter would eventually lead to honesty. Gloomy men are the ones whose tendency is toward crime and trouble.
> Consideration for others is man's noblest attitude toward his fellow-man.
> The habit of reading the right sort of books should begin early in life and continue throughout our days. * * * With Shakespeare, Emerson, Roosevelt, Scott, Cooper, Marden, and Hubbard one would have quite a representative collection for a start. * * * The Bible causes us to think!—and no library is complete without it.

It will be seen that Mr. Fairbanks has no revolutionary philosophy with which to stir the world. His recipe for happiness is more conspicuous for its exuberant cheer than for its orginality. As for success, he sums it up:

> We find that a sound body, a good mind, an honest purpose, and a lack of fear are the essential elements of success.

That is a large order, certainly! But just as certainly it is sane and wholesome. That is where the merit of Mr. Fairbanks's book lies for his readers; he puts a tremendous amount of breeziness into excellent platitudes.

The book is profusely illustrated with photographs of the author—seventeen of them, to be exact—and concludes with "A 'Close-up' of Douglas Fairbanks," by George Creel.

THE TRIPLE ALLIANCE

THE ORIGINS OF THE TRIPLE ALLIANCE: Three lectures. By Archibald Cary Coolidge. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.

THE preface to this little volume serves to recall that, for the greater part of the epoch of German ascendency, beginning with the Peace of Frankfort in 1871, the so-called Triple Alliance was the predominant political and military factor, the strongest developing force, in international relations. Its friends, alarmed by the rapid recovery of France and the spread of Panslavism, declared that it was the most effective safeguard of peace. Its enemies, measuring it in terms of direct disadvantage to themselves, denounced it as a cynically conservative league for the protection of illgotten gains. Although it dissolved when brought to the touchstone of actual war, the factors contributing to its formation present an object lesson that claims a study.

It is pleasant to recognize a book in which Bismarck as a statesman is not, if the expression may be used, melodramatized out of all lifelikeness. Pointing to the Chancellor's determined and often single-handed opposition to exaggerated nationalist aspirations, Professor Coolidge draws a clear distinction between his positive genius and the dreams of the modern Pan Germanist. "He neither rhapsodized over the merits of Kultur nor looked forward to an inevitable conflict between Slav and Teuton, although he regarded Russian Pan Slavism as a menace." The war scare of 1875 had made it clear to him that, in the event of another Franco-German war, Germany could not count again on the moral support or even the inaction of Russia. He had helped to launch Austria on a career of expansion to the southeast in sharp rivalry with Russia, thus insuring that the two would not combine against him; but his favored League of the Three Emperors had thereby become, to all purposes, a mere sham, and he determined while there was still time to bind Austria and Germany together by an alliance that should put an end to the dangers that threatened them both.

The original Triple Alliance was formed by this Austro-German treaty, supplemented in 1882 by separate though similar treaties between Italy and Austria, and Italy and Germany. Bismarck entertained little respect or liking for the Italians, and he was disposed to receive their overtures with coolness, but he obtained an important addition to the forces of the Austro-German alliance without paying much for it, as he refused to interest himself in Italy's Mediterranean affairs, and the guarantee he gave of the integrity of her territory imposed no burden upon Germany.

Professor Coolidge's scholarship has been supplemented by some practical experience in the Diplomatic Service, and he writes with a vigor and comprehensiveness that affords the reader a very clear perception of the relativity of events in the decade of reconstruction begun by the Peace of Frankfort and continued by the Congress of Berlin. The book contains little that is specifically new as fact or theory, but it is unusual among contemporary writings of this general description in that it is not colored by the subconscious predilections of the author. In fact, few recently published books will be found more effective aids to the preservation of detachment in forming judgments on international history and in envisaging the problems of reconstruction.

MR. GIBSON'S POEMS

COLLECTED POEMS. By Wilfrid Wilson Gibson. With Portrait Frontispiece. New York: The Macmillan Company. $2.25.

BY not a few of Mr. Gibson's out-and-out admirers this book no doubt will be warmly welcomed, containing, as it does, in addition to a number of new poems, most of those that appeared in his previous books, "Fires," "Daily Bread," "Womenkind," "Borderlands and Thoroughfares," "Battle," and "Livelihood"; but with the judicious the present publication will do nothing to enhance his reputation, and to the reader who here makes his first acquaintance with the poet the outstanding fact of the book will be that it extends to 552 pages. Indeed, even on those favorably disposed the present bulky volume will almost necessarily have an effect of monotony and weariness.

This monotony comes, we believe, from two main sources—the constricted round in which Mr. Gibson's imagination habitually exercises itself and the hard, bare style in which he finds expression; and both in his monotony and in the causes of it he bears more than a superficial likeness to certain aspects of a poet greater than himself, namely, Wordsworth. Like Wordsworth, he has a plain, severe way of writing which degenerates only too often into aridity and baldness, so that it would seem he is not so much the master of his style as it of him; like Wordsworth, too, he is almost exclusively interested in the lives of the simple and the poor. There, unfortunately, the resemblance stops: in the matter of style he never attains to the supreme excellence of absolute simplicity of the elder poet; and with regard to his outlook, his philosophy, the difference between the two is even more striking.

It is indeed a drab world with which Mr. Gibson deals—people poor, suffering, hardworking, wretched; and it speaks much for the breadth of his sympathies that he is so strongly awake to the social injustice under which these unfortunates drag out their lives. But there is such a thing as overemphasizing one's points, of painting a dull scene too gray; and this we believe is Mr. Gibson's chief defect. The idea one derives from an extensive perusal of Mr. Gibson's verse is that the poor can never be happy; the poet seems determined that the mechanic, the miner, the cottager, the seafaring folk of whom he writes shall be miserable, and—as he presents them—miserable they are.

The three sections entitled, "Stonefolds," "Daily Bread," and "Womenkind" are made up of twenty-five short sketches in dramatic form, which because of their uniformity of characters and handling are the least successful and most tiresome portions of the book. The section called "Battle" is also unconvincing; but in "Fires," "Thoroughfares," and especially "Borderlands" we have Mr. Gibson at his most entertaining; and in one poem particularly in the last-named section—"Bloodybush Edge"—the poet attains his surest and finest effect. With such a store of material to choose from, it is regrettable that instead of "Collected" he did not give us "Selected Poems," for Mr. Gibson, like the great poet with whom we compared him, is emphatically one who stands in need of discrimination, of a discrimination which would make him go far with little.

Ralph Adams Cram, Litt.D., LL.D.

In a masterly and convincing manner, Dr. Cram, whose work on the superb St. Thomas Church in New York, Princeton University, and the West Point Military Academy, has achieved world-wide admiration, develops his subject not only as an organic scheme of building but as a definite exponent of the religious, philosophical, social, political, and economic conditions that obtained in mediævalism.

All who think deeply of the present world crisis and of what is to come after will find illuminating guidance in Dr. Cram's scholarly and inspiring volume.

NOTABLE BOOKS IN BRIEF REVIEW

WAR FLYING. By A Pilot. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.

ONE YOUNG MAN. Edited by J. Hodder Williams. New York: George H. Doran Company. 75 cents.

A SUNNY SUBALTERN: Billy's Letters from Flanders. New York: George H. Doran Company. $1.

WITH A B.-P. SCOUT IN GALLIPOLI: A Record of the Baton Bulldogs. By E. Y. Priestman. Foreword by Lieut.-General Sir Robert Baden-Powell. Illustrated. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.50.

THESE four books present phases of war as seen by those who actually participate in the fighting. And that imbues the view with a quality entirely different from that of the noncombatant, however near to the real fighting he may come. The man who has himself taken part in the charge or the defense writes of it with a veracity of touch that can never be achieved by the onlooker, and a subtle difference of feeling pervades his whole viewpoint.

The general interest in aviation, because of the purpose of this country to make its influence in the war especially strong in the air, gives timeliness to the little book of personal experience, "War Flying," written by a pilot in the British Royal Flying Corps. The slender volume is made up of extracts from letters written to the author's home people covering both his period of training and his service at the front. An introductory explanation telling a little about the author shows him to have entered active service at the front and crossed the German lines before he had reached his nineteenth birthday. The letters, as might be expected, are buoyant with youth, but they narrate experiences of thrilling peril and adventure and of usefulness that would do credit to a man of twice his age.

"One Young Man" tells the story of a young Englishman who enlisted early in the war, fought at the front for nearly two years, and was so severely wounded at the battle of the Somme, early in July, 1916, that his fighting days were ended, although he still lives and is back at the desk which he left to go to the war. His story is of special interest because it is that of a man not a fighter by nature. He says that for the first two months of the war he did not give a thought to the possibility of himself becoming a soldier. "I couldn't imagine myself," he says, "with a rifle and bayonet chasing Huns, or standing the rough-and-ready life of the soldier, and the thought of blood was horrible. From appearances and manners one would have ticketed me as a conscientious objector." But he soon realized that the war was a more serious matter than he had thought, as did so many thousands of Englishmen after its first two or three months, and decided that it was his duty to help. The editor of the book has taken long extracts from the letters of "One Young Man" to various people and combined them into a running narrative by weaving them together with explanations and comments.

"A Sunny Subaltern" is a frank, happy-natured Canadian youth who enlisted and went to England with a contingent near the end of 1915. He was in a training camp in England for about three months and was then sent to the front, where he fought in Flanders until the late Summer of last year. The letters are all written to his mother in Canada, and the last one reveals that he had had "a blighty one" and was in a hospital in London. All the letters show a rather noteworthy gift for seeing and describing and a certain literary touch marks all the missives, without lessening their effect of frankness and truth. The accounts of his observations, experiences, and feelings are remarkably vivid.

The author of the letters in "With a B.-P. Scout in Gallipoli" had been before the war interested in the Boy Scout movement and had done much work as a Scoutmaster. During the early months of the war he served first as supervisor over a large district of the Boy Scouts, who were guarding places of danger from spies. But as soon as this work could be left he enlisted, received a commission, and after nine months of training was sent on the ill-fated expedition to the Dardanelles. He was in the blood-drenched landing at Suvla Bay in August, 1915, and three months later was killed while defending an advance post. The letters cover the entire time of his service, both in training in England and in Gallipoli. A bubbling sense of humor characterizes them throughout and he has always a keen eye for interesting little incidents, whether comic, pathetic, or tragic, and a clever pen in describing them. A great number of small pen and ink drawings, made by Mr. Priestman himself, illustrate the text and show the strong humorous bent of his mind as well as a marked gift for caricature.

ITALY IN THE WAR

SIX MONTHS ON THE ITALIAN FRONT. By Julius M. Price. Illustrated by the author. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $3.50.

WHY ITALY ENTERED INTO THE GREAT WAR. By Luigi Carnovale. Chicago: Italian-American Publishing Company.

THE second of these two books presents an eloquent defense by an Italian of Italy's participation in the war and the first effort we remember by an Englishman of the way in which Italy is carrying on her share of that war. Mr. Price is the war-artist correspondent of the Illustrated London News, himself making all the pictures for the illustration of his descriptive articles. These illustrations, of which there are twenty-five, all full page, give a distinctive and especial interest to the volume, so full of life and spirit are they, so representative of the region, so unusual and artistically so interesting.

Mr. Price went to Italy toward the end of May, 1915, and was there on the day of the declaration of war against Austria. After some months, much of the time at or near the front, he returned to England, but was back again among the Alps and the Italian soldiers of the battle zone the next Spring, spending there all last Summer and Autumn. His narrative is always readable, as he writes with much vivacity and dash, and he offers many interesting glimpses of the people, their attitude toward the war, the spirit of the troops, their achievements, and the obstacles they must overcome. He makes particularly vivid, for instance, with both pencil and pen, the difficulties of warfare in the Alpine region. One instance, which he describes and pictures, is the carrying of barbed wire for the trenches up the mountainside by peasant women on their backs. He saw a group of these women climbing a mountain trail no better than a goat track, each one carrying a fifty-pound coil of wire, the big guns thundering and shells bursting not far away.

He was with the army at the capture of Gorizia, and one chapter gives a graphic picture of the scenes as he motored and walked the next day over the region where had raged the worst of the terrific conflict. Afterward he watched the big operations on the Carso, being allowed to go wherever he wished quite freely. He comments upon the very noticeable absence of the smoking habit among the Italian troops, and says that they smoke very little when halted and almost not at all when on the march, in striking contrast to both the English and the French soldiers. Several times he speaks of the changing temperament among the Italians of today, who are, he thinks, less excitable, less hotheaded than their forebears were. "The men of Italy today," he says, "are of a different fibre, and, though the old-time mettle remains, it is shown differently. There is a growing tendency among all classes toward the imperturbability and placidity one associates with northern races."

Luigi Carnovale's sturdy volume is truly an Italian-American publication, since it contains his explanation of Italy's entrance into the great war in both languages. The English text fills the first three hundred pages, and the whole is then presented in Italian in the second half of the book. To find the roots of the convictions that forced Italy into the conflict he goes well back into history, beginning with the military violence visited upon some portions of Italy after the war of Maria Theresa for the Austrian throne, more than a hundred and fifty years ago. He goes into considerable detail as he recounts the revolutions that, during the last century, broke out, smoldered and then blazed again with almost every decade in the various Italian States. And throughout all that time he shows the never dying fire of revolt against Austrian rule to have been ready to break out in the irredentist provinces at any time if there had been hope of success.

Coming down to the immediate past, he accuses the present monarch of Italy of having been false to the Italian people in joining the alliance of the Central Powers. He declares that the monarchical Governmen of Italy is "absolute and despotic" and that the King did everything in his power to compel loyalty to the Teutonic Allies. But the people, "the new Italy," he says, "would not have it so, but first imposed neutrality, and at last forced the King, against his wish, to declare war.

The author thinks that the betrayal of faith was not that of the Italian nation in entering the war in order to free their fellow racials from Austrian rule, but that the real betrayal had taken place long before in the making of the treaty. He brings forward much interesting proof covering many years of the long, lasting, and constantly increasing feeling against Austria among the people of Italian blood in the irredentist provinces.

Mr. Carnovale is an intensely patriotic Italian, and therefore he may be pardoned for not always seeing in true perspective things outside the circle of his own glowing vision; but his readers who wish to preserve a judicial attitude will need to be on their guard against his point of view. And one cannot refrain from marveling that so ardent a patriot should choose to live in a country of which he has such a low opinion as he expresses of America.

EDUCATE YOUR CHILDREN

The Training of Today Is the Hope of Tomorrow

Your Child and My Child

are the Nation's most precious possessions. Never has there been a time when so much was demanded of the child. Everybody knows that the schools alone cannot furnish a practical education for life. THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE solves this great problem in the home. It is not a luxury; it is a necessity. It is not an expense; it is a saving of time, money, and mistakes. It gives the child the right to start on the road to knowledge. It teaches him the things which he ought to know, and without which he will always be handicapped in the battle of life. It brings the home and the school, the parent and the teacher, together on a common ground of effort. Can you afford to let your child do without the greatest educational help of the age?

The Book of Knowledge

The Children's Encyclopedia

"The home is the greatest educational institution," says the United States Commissioner of Education, and THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE is the most important educational tool in the home.

Your Child Will Grow Up to Thank You

Your child must be educated whether the nation is at war or in peace. It is the one thing which cannot be neglected, and cannot be put off. There has never been a time in the world's history when the future of the child was of such vital importance to the nation. Parents have discovered too late that their own education was unequal to the demands made upon it. Educators have known for a long time that the schoolroom is not furnishing the child of today with that practical information, that self-control, and that "desire-to-know" which alone can produce powerful, useful and happy men and women. Do not waste years of your child's precious time making him learn things which he cannot understand and read things which are far beyond his mental grasp. It will blunt the edge of his wholesome appetite for good books. In 500,000 homes today, THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE has proved, and is proving, the great new force in the life of the children. If you place this work in your home, your child will grow up to thank you.

THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE is the first practical work of reference for the young, arranged on an entirely new plan, as a series of delightful reading courses in the Great Departments of Knowledge,—Science, Astronomy, Physiology, History, Biography, Art and Literature. To this Great Treasure House of important, but marvelously interesting information, there have been added educational occupations of many kinds, Stories and Poems, Sports and Games. THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE supplements the work of the school, enlarges the life of the home and gives the child an education that will stand the test of life.

THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE educates the child spontaneously. Think what it means to you, father and mother, to know that there has been made for your child a wonderful selection of the important things which he ought to know, written so simply, and so delightfully illustrated that your boy and girl cannot possibly resist the magic of its pictured pages. They will go to bed with a volume under their pillows and remember in the morning the pages where they left off reading. It is practical, it is delightful, it is ideal. The years of greatest need are between six and eighteen. Do not keep your child needy for the help he needs NOW. The home is the greatest educational agency in the world.

THIS SEASON'S BOOKS

THERE are more books being read this Fall than ever before in this country. That is the statement made by one of the leading New York publishers, not in reply to one of those cut-and-dried questions as to "how the book business is getting on," but as a voluntary expression of opinion based on careful observation and personal, or rather business, experience. Of course, if one accepts the statement as true, the question inevitably follows: "In what way, then, has the war stimulated the reading of books?" For, today the war is almost certain to be found as a deep, underlying cause in practically every new departure, or movement, reflecting public sentiment. Thus, if books are being read more this season it must be because the war has something—a good deal—to do with it. And that is true. The publisher already quoted argues that the war has greatly increased our thirst for knowledge in directions that the average reader has heretofore scarcely thought of. It has produced an intellectual seriousness that does not rest content with what one finds in periodical literature, but which is bound to turn for its more complete satisfaction to books. Obviously, with the creation of this new demand for books, a demand admittedly due to the war, the kind of literature that the public wants has also undergone a change. This change is already easily apparent. Works of fiction, for instance, we have—the popular demand for them is probably as strong as ever. But the fiction people read today is different in kind from that which they used to read. It is the fiction that deals with vital things, that has human life confronted with the great problems that go to make up life for its theme. The "best seller" of yesteryear, it is safe to say, would not be a best seller today. Judged only by the fiction of the period the intellectual stimulus exerted by the war is little short of amazing. But of course this influence on our current literature is more penetrating than that. The so-called serious books, the nonfiction books, are being read as they never were before. With a whole word in arms, people who hitherto rarely opened the covers of a book turn with avidity for information on a variety of subjects that we are not accustomed to look for in what is commonly known as popular reading. History, biography, religion, philosophy, poetry—these are some of the domains of literature that the war seems to have unlocked, as it were, for the reading public.

THIS increase in the popularity of books and the change in their character so markedly noticeable this season brings a new interest to the AUTUMN NUMBER of THE NEW YORK TIMES REVIEW OF BOOKS, to be published Oct. 21. The books in every department of literature that answer to the exceptional needs of the hour will be carefully selected for this AUTUMN NUMBER from the season's publications and given, with brief descriptions, in a classified list containing in all 500 titles. Besides this list there will be a bibliography of the war covering the period that has elapsed since THE BOOK REVIEW'S last war bibliography, published in the SPRING BOOK NUMBER of April 21 this year. Besides these carefully selected lists of representative books the forthcoming AUTUMN NUMBER of THE BOOK REVIEW will have critical reviews of the season's leading books, notable among them a delightful article on a forthcoming volume of reminiscence by Professor BRANDER MATTHEWS, written for this number by WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS. These special numbers of THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW have long since won an authoritative place among the annual surveys that are made of our literature. This year, it is believed, the AUTUMN BOOK NUMBER will have a peculiar interest and significance. It will be more valuable than ever as a guide to those who want to choose the best books for their particular purposes from the season's publications.

A REVIEW of what the United States has done during the six months following our declaration of war makes a narrative of surprising interest. Watching events as they take place from day to day, listening as one must to the complaints and criticisms that inevitably accompany the activities of a great democracy when it undertakes a stupendous task like the present war, we are apt to underrate what the Government has actually accomplished in preparing to fight Germany. In reality it is a record of remarkable achievement, and forms a fascinating—if not the leading—feature of this month's NEW YORK TIMES CURRENT HISTORY MAGAZINE, where a succinct statement is given of our military and naval progress, together with a list of army and navy camps. This is supplemented by accounts of the great mercantile marine that is being created for the war emergency, what the Government has done and is doing in regard to the "enemies within the United States," and a sketch of the great relief system developed by the American Red Cross. Besides this record of America's first six months of the war there are special articles in this number of THE CURRENT HISTORY MAGAZINE on such subjects as the peace agitation initiated by the Pope's appeal, the situation in Russia, the recent Italian victories, the Japanese Mission to this country, Sweden's unneutral acts, Spain and the war, three years of aerial warfare, the Socialists and the war, anti-submarine tactics, a new phase of the Balkan question, Germany after three years of war, disclosures of King Constantine's relations with Germany, &c. The period covered by this number of CURRENT HISTORY ends with Sept 20.

SCARCITY of paper and war prices have given new point to the complaint that many of our modern novels would gain in interest and effectiveness if they were told in much fewer words than are usually lavished on them. As a matter of fact there is scarcely a literary work, fiction or otherwise, that would not bear condensation and—in a number of cases—even be improved by it. But there is something about the very leisureliness of a novel that one enjoys and would not miss for a good deal, although the long passages of description, conversation, and analyses are frequently indefensible on the score of literary art. Every now and then an economist in words announces a campaign against literary usage in such matters, and he invariably fails of his purpose. It was not so long ago, for instance, that one of these reformers took three of SCOTT'S novels in hand and cut out all their "superfluous passages." The tabloid volumes that resulted were a ludicrous shadow of poor Sir WALTER, and were everywhere condemned. Just why this was so it is hard to explain. The cut-out passages certainly were "superfluous"; they hindered the story; they had no apparent reason for being; they were not "good art." Nevertheless, when they were cut out the novels that remained had lost all that distinctive charm that unquestionably belongs to the Waverley series. And the reading public would have none of them. That, by the way, is an argument the curtailers of our fiction should not ignore. The public when it buys a novel does not want a short story. The plots of most novels could easily be given in a paragraph, but the paragraph would be utterly uninteresting. As a matter of fact the most successful novels appear to have been those that have not been economical of words. The story must be well told, but the novelist can take all the time he wants in the telling.

Oyez!—AUTHORS—Oyez!

COLLIER'S wants good short stories and articles from 2,000 to 5,000 words in length. Other things being equal, Collier's will pay as much for work of this length as is ordinarily paid for longer work.

COLLIER'S has a double-barreled idea in this connection:

First—To cut out the "run over"—that is, the continuation of stories and articles from the forepart of the magazine to advertising pages further back. This breaking up of reading matter is a bête noire to reader, publisher, author—all three.

Second—To get a larger number of features into each issue.

Obviously this means still another requirement: Live stories and vivid sketches of life running from 750 to 1,500 words for the back pages of the magazine. We want these too.

We are naturally concentrating more and more on the war, so that fiction, articles, or personal narratives touching vividly on the war, or on our national situation brought about by the war, are wanted especially.

COLLIER'S believes that its autumn drive for shorter fiction and articles will appeal forcibly to readers, but even more forcibly to authors. Isn't it true that authors sometimes involuntarily weaken a story or article by expansion because of an actual or supposed magazine prejudice against short work?

COLLIER'S purpose, as always, is: To get the best fiction and articles that are written in America. Yes, to get the best work that can be written in America to-day.

Therefore we shall continue to accept work running over 5,000 words. Many themes do demand more elbowroom. But we prefer the shorter articles and fiction. Payment will be based on quality, not on length.

ARE THE LETTERS OF "CHRISTINE" GENUINE?

The New York Times Review of Books:

THE publishers of "Christine" are being taken to task in some quarters for not stating definitely whether that much-discussed book is fact or fiction; whether Alice Cholmondeley is the real name of the editor or author, and so on ad infinitum. The volume purports to be a series of letters written by Christine Cholmondeley, a young violin student in Berlin at the outbreak of the war, to her mother in England. It has precipitated a crisis the like of which has been unknown in literary circles for many years.

"Why don't you ferret out the authorship and settle the matter?"

Thus runs a letter which the Macmillan Company recently received from a much exercised reader of "Christine." This is easier said than done. The author is entirely unknown to her publishers—all arrangements for the book having been made through a lawyer, and that lawyer maintains a professional silence.

"You should not have published 'Christine' without knowledge as to its authenticity and authorship," thus runs another coment.

To this emphatic exception is taken by the editorial department of the Macmillan Company. The book merited publication whether it was fact or fiction. It was offered by a reputable lawyer, and to maintain that it should not be published because the author preferred to remain unknown or because there was no proof of the genuineness of the work seems unreasonable.

No one questions the right of an author to issue a book anonymously or under a nom de plume, thereby hiding his identity. Is not this just what "Mrs. Cholmondeley" has done, in effect? Even this is making an assumption which is perhaps not warranted, for there is nothing to disprove that Alice Cholmondeley may not be the real name of the creator of "Christine."

But, perhaps, after all the most interesting phase of the situation lies in the "guesses" which are being sent in to the publishers as to the authorship. A number of prominent men and women in the literary world have been suggested. Just at the present moment the one that seems to have gained the most popularity is that "Christine" is the work of the author of "Elizabeth and Her German Garden." One correspondent implies that it is the publisher's duty to state absolutely whether this is true or not. The publishers, on the other hand, as will be seen by those who know the facts, are not in a position either to affirm or deny the correctness of this assertion. They do, however, maintain that they can see nothing conclusive in the reasons which are advanced to uphold this opinion.

In the first place a writer in The Philadelphia Ledger cites certain similarities in style between the books by the author of "Elizabeth and Her German Garden" and "Christine." These similarities, in the experience of the publishers, are evident only to this particular person. No one else whom the publishers have consulted can discover that they exist.

Again, it is argued by this same correspondent that the books by the author of "Elizabeth and Her German Garden" are issued by the Macmillan Company, thereby implying, of course, that any new book from her pen would be brought out by the same firm. This is not wholly the case. The Macmillan Company has not published a work by this writer for more than ten years, during which period she has produced several volumes with great success. This in the minds of many discriminating people who weigh their evidences carefully tends to discredit the entire supposition.

After all, perhaps, one guess is as good as another. How about William Lyon Phelps's suggestion that it is Owen Wister who is responsible for "Christine"? or the remark of another critic that it is Gertrude Atherton or James Lane Allen? Doubtless, with application, one could find just as weighty evidence to support these claims as has been advanced in the case of the author of "Elizabeth and Her German Garden."

And, any way, whether it is fact or fiction, it is a remarkable book, and this is the feature which THE NEW YORK TIMES REVIEW OF BOOKS thinks should be emphasized, as is shown in the following from a recent notice in its columns.

> "Christine" is a remarkable book. Its descriptions of Berlin society at the outbreak of the war ring true. Doubtless it is based on "genuine" letters. But we can't help believing that in editing these letters Alice Cholmondeley's knowledge of the needs of fiction was drawn on repeatedly. And we can't see that the book—even as a "document"—has suffered in consequence. The fact part has not been injured by the fiction.

The New York Times Review of Books:

Sometimes one wonders if there comes up a new crop of book reviewers every year, or if the old ones lose their memories. Or is it that the book of yesteryear leaves no impression on the man who is obliged to read professionally?

The reviewers who are asking if "Alice Cholmondeley's Christine" is a real document seem to have forgotten the twirls and twists of fancy and prejudice by which the Countess Van Arnim, better known as "Elizabeth" of the German Garden, writes her signature over all her books.

Christine is the own blood cousin of Fraulein Schmidt, whose love affair with Mr. Anstruther fascinated us awhile ago.

Could any one but Elizabeth, who wrote "The Benefactress," have given just that atmosphere to the pension where Christine lived? and wasn't it the creator of Fraulein Schmidt who made Christine when both hands were occupied with her violin wish she had a tail for the flies?

Everybody knows now that Elizabeth is an Englishwoman who married a German and disliked her adopted country more and more until finally the war sent her back to England, renouncing Germany and all its works, and taking back her English citizenship.

Considering her explosions of dislike of the Germans in "The Caravaners" of a few years ago, "Christine" is full of artistic restraint. It had to be to have the influence it has had. One feels as one has felt in other books by the same author, that there are some very clever portraits of real people given us. And why not? Why has a writer less license than a painter?

Is it because more people understand the meaning of words than of contour and color?

At any rate, Elizabeth has shown her technique in "Christine."

If she did not write the book she has had the aptest pupil artist ever had.

ANNA LEACH.

New York Times Review of Books:

The "guess" that "Christine" is the work of Countess von Arnim is extremely shrewd. All the arguments cited undoubtedly point that way. Yet the very plausibility of this "guess" tends to the ignoring of a serious objection to the theory presented by the book itself.

Countess von Arnim certainly knows the German language; her twenty years' residence in the country should insure that. Now, Christine's occasional use of a German expression is exactly what we might expect from an author whose knowledge of the language was acquired at high school or colleges. Such phrases as "fabelhafte Enthusiasmus," "verfluchte Bengel," "bitte fur mich," are liberally sprinkled throughout the later pages of the book. Only a writer naïvely unconscious of what he is doing could perpetrate German like this. One to whom German has become a second mother tongue could hardly manufacture these un-German phrases, even with deliberate intention.

Is not Owen Wister a more likely candidate for the post of "Christine's" sponsor? Compare his "Pentecost of Calamity," written early in 1915, with "Christine," written (presumably) just two years later. The absolute identity of theme is striking. So also is the similarity of style. Even those who think that the Countess von Arnim wrote the book will probably agree that in this respect the "Pentecost" presents a stronger resemblance to "Christine" than does "Elizabeth." "Christine" does indeed go deeper into the analysis of the German mind than Mr. Wister's earlier book. But the added knowledge of Germany is just what Mr. Wister must normally have acquired in his reading on the subject during the intervening two years.

WAR POEMS

WAR POEMS IN FRENCH AND ENGLISH. By Fleming Tockerman. New York: Brentano's. $1.25.

Unique is this little volume, for more than half the poems it contains are written in French by a native American author. Many of these have been recited in the hospitals in France and at meetings abroad for the benefit of the allied wounded. These poems are followed by three pages of letters from French men and women engaged in military or hospital work who write of the appreciation with which the French wounded have read or heard the poems. One is from the American Ambulance Hospital at Neuilly, which tells how much the wounded French soldiers in that hospital have appreciated them and how much they have been moved by the fact that they are written by an American. A dozen poems, most of them in praise of England's part in the war, are in English. One, called "Britain's Pledge," begins thus:

> O Teuton of little faith,
> Hark to what Britannia saith;
> All men listen to her word,
> She is never rashly heard.
> This shalt thou record:
> Not until free of thy yoke,
> With her chimneys belching smoke,
> Not until the yellow grain
> Ripens in her fields again,
> Not until the Hun has fled
> From Belgian ground soaked with red,
> Shall we sheathe the sword.

The book is published for the benefit of the wounded of the Entente Allies.

The Public Defender

An argument in favor of the creation of court officials to care for the interests of impecunious persons accused of crime is made by Mayer C. Goldman of the New York Bar in a volume entitled "The Public Defender: A Necessary Factor in the Administration of Justice." Justice Wesley O. Howard of the Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court supports Mr. Goldman's plea in a foreword. (G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.)

REVIEW of BOOKS

SOME AUTUMN BOOKS FOR YOUNG READERS

ALREADY the children's books for the holidays are out in large numbers; books for presents require great care in selection, and with these, at least, there will be no difficulty in finishing the Christmas shopping early. There are all kinds of books, as usual, many bringing in old friends whom the children know, and others quite new and delightful.

One of the first of the interesting ones which may be mentioned is "School Girl Allies," by Rebecca Middleton Samson, (Lothrop, Lee & Shepard, $1.35.) The book possibly borrows a part of its name from the Allies of the war, for the girls who are brought together are from among the nations now fighting together, but the interesting old "Pensionnat Van Pelt," the Belgian school for girls, is in Brussels long before the interesting old city had fallen upon its present hard times. It is a better story for that, and the only wars in it are the small frictions incident to the bringing together of a healthy, happy lot of girls of different nationalities. "Sherry" and "Tad" are two American girls who take up their studies with the harum-scarum Belgian girls, whose manners at times are so perfect; the primly severe (also at times) English girls, and there is one girl from Ireland, and others from Paris.

It is a long and interesting story, telling in detail the life of the girls of the pensionnat, so different from a school of the same class in this country, with its many restrictions, the black uniform dress of the pupils and the interesting "sorties" the girls make into the city, including their visits to the patisseries. It is in the latter that the girls find, as the story tells, "platters heaped with buttery, nutty, spicy, fruity, jammy, flaky, creamy, crusty, crackly, crunchy compounds called 'des pâtes.'"

A boys' book which has a name familiar to all ears in these days is "The Plattsburgers," by Arthur Stanwood Pier. (Houghton Mifflin Company, $1.25.) This is the real Plattsburg, but in the days preliminary to the coming of America into the war. It is a story of the first camp at Plattsburg, when the college boys went up with no thought that real war service would follow. It is a true story of camp life, with nothing technical, but showing the difficulties in first attempts at military discipline. There is a grouchy Corporal and several lively privates who give some excuse for the grouchiness.

There is a new "Patty Book," by Carolyn Wells, "Patty Blossom," (Dodd, Mead & Co., $1.25,) to be welcomed by all admirers of the gay little heroine, although this is the seventh volume in which she has appeared. There were signs of matrimony in previous books, but in this it is on the threshold, and Patty in a beautiful apple-blossom kimono—Patty is noted for the becomingness of her gowns—is actually engaged. For littler girls there is "Plucky Little Patsy," by Nina Rhodes, (Lothrop, Lee & Shepard, $1,) quite a long and serious story, full of interest, telling of the little Patsy who comes from America to England to be an heiress and a part of many interesting happenings. A littler girl than Patsy, but whose story is nearly as long, is Elizabeth Bess, a dear little girl of the sixties whose life is chuck full of interesting incidents as is that of "Wee-um," as Elizabeth Bess calls her much-loved brother William. (Macmillan, $1.25.) "When I was a Little Girl in Holland," is by Cornelia de Groot, (Lothrop, Lee & Shepard, 75 cents,) who tells what the little people in the land of the dikes do, the things they eat and wear, their games, and there are pictures showing the country and a portrait of Queen Wilhelmina of Holland with her sceptre and crown on a table beside her.

Chuck full of excitement is a story of the riots of 1863, "The Lost Little Lady," by E. B. and A. A. Knipe, (Century Company, $1.35.) There is plenty of both plot and incident. A dog with a diamond ring on a gold chain about his neck is one of the interesting links in the chain of adventures. There are mysteries of a different kind in "The Spanish Chest," by Edna A. Brown, (Lothrop, Lee & Shepard, $1.35.) An American family spending some time on the Island of Jersey is instrumental in the finding of the chest, which contains historical treasures of great interest. There are caves, vaults, and haunted rooms, which all add to the mystery of the story. Ella W. Beattie's "The Newcomers" (Houghton Mifflin Company, $1.25,) is a story of human life in a village, but it too, has its thrills and mysteries, and Annie Dee falls into the cistern. A small school story, none the less readable because it is not long, is "The Outsider at St. Agatha's," by Edith Robinson, (Pilgrim Press, 75 cents.) An interesting incident upon which the results of the story hang is the visit of a small girl to a famous poet, whom she invites to write a poem for her.

An animal biography is "The Elephant," a tale of life in the African jungle by Agnes Herbert, with illustrations, including a fine colored frontispiece by Winifred Austin, (Frederick A. Stokes Company, $2.) In a volume of 284 pages it takes the elephant from his calfhood to old age and death, telling incidentally of the dangers incurred by the ivory hunters and the wonderful scent and swiftness of elephants. "Silverheels" is another of Mrs. Gabrielle E. Jackson's animal stories, a nice human story of a horse who is much better than some humans and a first-class hero for a story, (George H. Doran, $1.) "Little Boy Bear," by Belle Kanaris Maniates, author of "Amarilly of Clothes Line Alley," (Pilgrim Press, 50 cents,) is the story not only of a little bear, but a little boy whom Mother Polar Bear adopts, but finally gives up to his own mother. "Cloud Boat Stories," by Oliver Roberts Barton, (Houghton Mifflin, $1,) is a book of bedtime wonder stories, with excellent illustrations in line drawings and colors by Milo Winter.

BRITISH FINANCE

THE SYSTEM OF FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION OF GREAT BRITAIN. A report by W. F. Willoughby, W. W. Willoughby, and Samuel McC. Lindsay. New York and London: D. Appleton & Co., for the Institute for Government Research. $2.75.

CONGRESS has recently appropriated the largest sum of money ever voted by any legislative body. While the volume and complexity of Government finance has been thus increasing the methods of controlling it have deteriorated. When "Uncle Joe" Cannon was Speaker there was something like oversight of appropriations. Members had to arrange with him for money they wanted, and not seldom they resented his refusals. To those protesting he would say that their method of procedure was to elect another Speaker, but that otherwise there would be no money appropriated which the Treasury could not afford to spend. When the Democrats succeeded the Republicans in power they "reformed" the Speaker's method with a vengeance. For his autocratic rule they substituted oversight of appropriations by separate committees. No one of them was in any relation with any other, and neither any one nor all of them had any responsibility for finding the money to be spent, nor for seeing that it was spent economically. The organization of our Government finance is directed solely to prevent defalcation. There is no provision for any system of cost accounting such as the Government is pressing upon corporations in order that profits may be regulated. There are those who think it more necessary that Government expenses should be regulated than that profits should be reduced. Among them may be included the authors of this book.

Acting on behalf of the Institute for Government Research, they planned a study of the financial methods of leading countries with a view to improving those of their own country. This book represents the results of their study of British finances, and it is to be lamented that the war makes it unlikely that the series will be completed. Enough has been done already to show that our methods are among the worst known. That applies to fundamentals rather than to details. Our attention has been spent too much upon "interesting" details, for they are personal, and often scandalous. Principles of finance are too dreary for the common people. Only Institutes for Government Research are interested in the science of Government accounting. It is a great pity. It is even a duty to try to stimulate interest. The authors do this by contrasting the British practice with our own. Take, for instance, our methods with public buildings, and river and harbor improvements. The British have no such scandal or trouble. The reason is that the House of Commons will receive no proposal for such expenses unless recommended upon the Government's responsibility. A similar self-denying ordinance by our House would end our log-rolling and pork barrel nuisance. It is a recurring evil, and there are single bills which have concealed in their vitals more loss to the Treasury than all the vulgar thefts in our history.

Another fundamental in Government accounting is that the Executive, the Congress, and the people should have the entire financial program before them all at once, so that it may be judged as a whole, and in its relation to the past and the future. Economy is impossible when the proposals are dealt with piecemeal. Each item might be dealt with rigorously, and yet the sum of the totals might be intolerable. The impropriety that the taxing power should direct the spending power to spend money is obvious. It follows that the initiative of proposals should rest with the spending power, subject to the oversight and criticism of the power which finds the money to spend. It is equally obvious that the body which votes the money should see that it is spent as ordered. In other words, there ought to be, and is, a Parliamentary audit of expenses. That duty is performed by our Treasury, without Congressional oversight. The British Treasury officials who perform this duty are officers of Parliament, and their work is supervised by a committee of which the Chairman is a member of the opposition. Once our Congress has voted money it forgets the subject and leaves the rest to the Treasury. Our Treasury is a custodian and has no function as an executive. If the accounts balance that is all the Treasury cares about. It is rather a virtue to expend an appropriation, and it is nobody's duty to check spending if it is taking a wrong direction. There is neither initiative nor "follow up" in our methods. Our taxlayers are jealous of surrendering initiative to the Executive, but might be tempted into it by offering them the power of oversight of the Treasury. The deficiencies of our Government in these respects are so great that it is ludicrous to think of Government regulating men of business until after it has reformed itself. "Physician heal thyself," is the thought uppermost in reading this authoritative and instructing essay.

hate lover; "ever gallant, ever dashing, ever laughing."

By far the best of the book is the note which is struck at the very beginning. We are possessors here of a mood which puts us into the spirit of the romance at once. There is a tinge of keen, Autumn air, and a biting aroma from the smokes of countless hidden fires that blend well with the rough, savage sweep of the country; and in the fading sunset glow, marking the coming of the "brown hour," when "twixt dog and wolf" there is no distinction, there is a foreboding of the tragedy, pathos, and happiness to com...

CASE OF MARY SHERMAN

THE CASE OF MARY SHERMAN. By Jasper Ewing Brady. Illustrated by Charles F. Lester. New York: Britton Publishing Company. $1.35

Like many a diocese of today, the See of Presidio is practically bankrupt after a well-meaning, scholarly Bishop's rule that was utterly unable to cope with the demands made upon modern church administration. To occupy this unenviable position the Rev. Henry Anderson is called from an Eastern parish. Bishop Anderson is the modern type of cleric—a very mannish man in clerical garb, one who can sit in the bleachers at a baseball game and have as good a time as any one. He is personally active, strong, with a considerable reputation as a preacher and writer. He straightway sets his diocese upon its feet from a spiritual and a financial standpoint, after which he is drawn into a franchise fight in which his principal opponent is Dudley, Presidio's leading editor and the real ruler of the city. The struggle between these two giants and its eventual surprising outcome comprise the theme of "The Case of Mary Sherman."

Mr. Brady has told his tale with power and force, presenting a plot that moves rapidly from the book's beginning to its end. There is a vividness about his writing that makes it attractive. It is a pity that the characters are not quite up to the rest of the novel. The Bishop is too much the Christian athlete, his narrow-mindedness being his most human attribute. Throughout the story virtue is too virtuous. Dudley is well drawn, except in the spots where his vein of sentiment is handled clumsily and too obviously. Kearney, his right-hand man, stands out as the most human and attractive character of the lot.

"The Case of Mary Sherman" speaks promisingly for its author's future work, for he can weave together an ingenious plot out of everyday, plausible happenings, which he handles in a manner that sustains interest.

A TOP-FLOOR IDYL

A TOP-FLOOR IDYL. By George Van Schaick. Illustrated. Small, Maynard & Co. $1.50 net.

A pretty, rose-colored little story about what happened on the top floor of a New York boarding house, Mr. Van Schaick's new novel is a sort of fairy tale with the ogres and witches carefully left out. With a single exception, every character in the book of any importance—the baby included—is as good as gold. Some of them are considerably better, and even the single exception has many excuses for his incorrect conduct, sees the error of his ways, and is entirely happy and virtuous in the last chapter.

David Cole, who tells the story, is a middle-aged bachelor, a writer, quite content with his modest room on the top floor of Mrs. Milliken's boarding house, near Washington Square, and his friendship for Frieda Long, an artist, and a spinster, fat, good-heartedness personified, and the best-drawn character in the book. One day, however, it chances that the room across the hall from David's is engaged by the young American widow of a French soldier killed in the battle of the Marne. Her baby arrives before it is expected, and David, who is the kindest of the kind, with "the strength of a man and the heart of a child," interests himself in the welfare of the young mother and her little Paul. Frieda helps him, and so does young Dr. Porter, a youth endowed with red hair, perseverance, and a cheerful disposition. Of course there is a love story, and everything comes out splendidly in the end, for the author is nothing if not generous to his characters, and showers talent, success, and money upon them with a lavish hand. The little tale is prettily written, with touches of fun that do much to relieve its sentimentality, and the reader becomes quite fond of the fat and benevolent Frieda.

WILLIAM OF ORANGE

WILLIAM, BY THE GRACE OF GOD. By Marjorie Bowen. E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.50 net.

William the Silent, Prince of Orange and hero of the Netherlands, is the "William, by the Grace of God," who gives his title to Miss Bowen's book. We meet him first in one of his darkest hours when, an exile, homeless and almost penniless, he traveled under an assumed name to the Court of the Elector of Saxony and there met that Charlotte de Bourbon, daughter of the Duc de Montpensier, whom he subsequently married. Through the years of struggle and disappointment we follow him, when the St. Bartholomew destroyed his hopes of aid from France, when the defeat of Mookar Heyde robbed him of his two brothers, Louis and Henry, and his friend the young Duke Christopher. Then comes the siege of Leiden, the desperate measures resorted to for the relief of the city, the terrible suspense and final victory. Occasionally the scene shifts to the Court of the sinister Phillip, when plot after plot was laid for William's assassination, plots that failed one after another, until at last a fanatic succeeded in taking William's life with the weapon William's generosity had enabled him to purchase.

The book is a picture of the times and an historical narrative rather than a novel. There is practically no fiction plot and the interest depends entirely on the actual occurrences and the character of William himself. But these are quite enough to hold the attention of any reader, for few events in history are more inspiring than the brave fight of the Netherlands against the mighty power of Spain, a veritable combat of dwarf and giant, with victory at last won through a courage defeat could not quell, and few figures in history are as gallant as is that of "William, by the Grace of God."

WAY OF THE WINEPRESS

THE WAY OF THE WINEPRESS. By W. Riley. New York: Putnam. $1.50.

The way of the winepress is trodden by more than one of the sore beset characters in this novel. There is Mr. Middleton, the proud mill owner of West Riding, who believes that when trade changes he must let his goods rot in the warehouse and take no help from his friends, that his God, who loves sacrifice, may be appeased. There is Mr. Trueman, the "atheist" scholar, who finds love when he is crippled past recovery. There is "Vic," mill girl and university student, who leaves her scholarly pursuits to serve her invalid lover. Indeed, the sole person whose suffering is only sympathetic and vicarious is young Louis Turner, the narrator. This lad, as the protegé of his employer and the friend of the other protagonists, watches them on the rough road each must travel, and sees himself helpless to help.

Unhappy Mr. Middleton, on whose financial difficulties the interest of the book is focused, is a stubborn fanatic. His dutiful way of bearing his troubles, no matter what they may entail upon his mill hands and associates, does not make it any easier for the reader to bear with him. He is very real, especially in "is mad 'iga," and one is inclined to wonder at Louis's patience with this proud old religionist, though it is richly rewarded at the close. There are two villains in the book, one a wily financier and one a vindictive mill hand, and it is the latter whose machinations quicken somewhat the slow progress of the story. But "the way of the winepress is the way of loving sacrifice," and it becomes, if the author is to be believed, a way of joy for all who tread it.

THE WAGES OF HONOR

THE WAGES OF HONOR. By Katherine Holland Brown. New York: Scribners. $1.35.

A volume of short stories should give a fairly comprehensive picture of its author's capabilities. This collection by Katherine Holland Brown shows her to be a writer of facility and some charm. But, despite the fact that her stage is set everywhere from a university rostrum to a Mexican cliff, and her protagonists range from a small boy to a dredgeman's wife, there is a sameness about them that is not wholly a matter of style. They are all stories with happy endings, irrespective of the logic of the situation. Moreover, while her men are brave and clever, Miss Brown holds a brief for her own sex, and her women are creatures whose strength and strategy are only exceeded by the purity of their devotion. On the whole, these are agreeable tales, and the author knows how to use suspense to draw interest, but they are not more significant than the ordinary magazine story, which is the form in which they originally appeared.

CONQUEST

CONQUEST. By Olive Wadsley. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.40.

The joint product of Paris and London continues to fascinate the author of "Conquest." Her latest novel centres around a child of the Rue das Quatre Vins, who migrates to London at the age of 10, his sole incumbrances being the dog of his Apache hero and thirteen-year-old Diane, his pretty chum. A gamin, hard as a nut and quick as a terrier, Bill Achat accepts the chances of his odd little life with the indifference bred of his experience.

The fates which rule over street arabs, artists, and prizefighters alike, send Bill from his employment in a fruit vendor's shop to the artists who are trying to save Fedor, his employer's son, from a lifetime behind the counter. Bill is untouched by Fedor's ambitions, and when the latter runs away to the Paris studios Bill gets a job in a gymnasium. The remainder of the book, save for one clever bit about Bill's visit to his old haunts and his encounter with Philaine, the young Russian woman who wakes him up, is concerned with Bill's conquest of his work and of the woman he loves. And the rest of the book is poor. There is keen charm in the portions that show Bill fighting and lying for a roll, and kissing a maternal demi-mondaine for a franc; Bill posing with nonchalant scorn for his artist friend; Bill becomes as putty between the fingers of the remarkable Philaine. Here are the stir and the vulgarity and the interest of life. It is regrettable that Miss Wadsley does not keep to this pitch throughout, instead of falling into commonplace, as she does when she writes of Bill in London society, and, by the same token, Bill in love.

GASTON OLAF

GASTON OLAF. By Henry Oyen. George H. Doran Company. $1.35 net.

Half French, half Norwegian by descent, American by birth and inclination, was Gaston Olaf François Thorson, a giant of a man, graceful, reckless, generous, a born fighter, and a born dweller in the wilds, and follower of the open trail. He and his partner, Tom Pine, were woodsmen, who came to the little river town of Havens Falls intending to work for David Taggart, the lumberman. Taggart had heard many tales about Gaston Olaf, and believed him to be just the sort of man he needed. But, daredevil and fighter though he was, Gaston Olaf was thoroughly and absolutely "square." After his decidedly unconventional entrance into the town had startled a good many people he learned a few things, and when he set out for Camp Nine he discovered certain others. Thereupon he set himself to the task of saving Rose Havens's property for her and defeating "Devil Dave" Taggart. But "Devil Dave" was not without ingenuity, and he fought back with some cleverness and no scruples, until presently the entire town was lined up on the side of one man or the other. A pitched battle ensued, but had it not been for the sacrifice of one quiet individual the forces of lawlessness and Taggart might have won.

The little story is a good specimen of its particular type, with plenty of action and some rather unexpected twists. There is fighting galore, of course, some entertaining descriptions, and an ending rather out of the ordinary, more reasonable and with more promise of real contentment to come than one usually finds in this kind of tale.

THE BIG LITTLE PERSON

THE BIG LITTLE PERSON. By Rebecca Hooper Eastman. With frontispiece. Harper & Brothers. $1.40 net.

A dainty little fairy tale, with two love stories, three mysteries, and an attractive heroine, is this new novel by Rebecca Hooper Eastman. The "Big Little Person's" real name was Arathea Manning, and there was a time in her life when, sweet and charming though she was, it seemed as though she was fairly pursued by ill-luck. Her father died, the fortune he left was lost, her sister committed suicide, and she herself recovered from scarlet fever to find that she was deaf—incurably deaf, the specialist said. And sweet and charming as her mother was, she was a weak, ineffective sort of person, more of a care than a help to Arathea. So it is not surprising that Arathea was not feeling very happy when she met Miss Beemis in the first chapter of the book.

And even after she met Miss Beemis it seemed for quite a long while that ill-luck still clung to her; but then if she had not been so unhappy she would not have written to the "Kantwearout Man" and a number of delightful things would never have happened. She is a brave and sweet-tempered heroine, while nearly all the other characters in the book are pleasant people, though, like the plot, they belong to fairy tales rather than to real life. The author frankly calls her story a romance, however, and a very sweet and entertaining romance it is, neatly constructed, and written with more than a little charm.

DESTINY

DESTINY. By Julia Seton, M. D. Edward J. Clode. $1.35 net.

In a preface to this book the author kindly informs us that it "holds its own merits," and that it is "a story of the absolute." Its heroine, Audrienne Lebaron, was discontented. She disliked living in the country and wanted to go to the city. All the persuasions of a young farmer who adored her and upon meeting her remarked, "All hail the queen of the setting sun" were not enough to make her change her mind. So to the city she went, and there she stayed with her friend, Lolone, whose husband, Dr. St. Elmo, was a psychic and held séances. Audrienne studied "all sciences, psychologies, philosophies, and religions" with a Madame Arnold, who was "a true scientist" and desired to found a "Universal School of the Mysteries." She also studied "the deeper laws of the inner relationship of spheres and consciousness" with Dr. St. Elmo. Presently she fell in love. All the characters talk a very great deal, and the author indulges in endless dissertations.

INN OF DISENCHANTMENT

THE INN OF DISENCHANTMENT. By Lisa Keays. Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.25 net.

This slender volume contains fifteen little essays, brief, fragile trifles, touched with a certain delicate wistfulness and charm. Written, nearly all of them, in a minor key, a little whimsical now and then, and with a calm and not unpleasant kind of sadness, they have a twilight lure of their own. Disenchantment, the charm of the unattainable, life's compromises—these form the bases of the themes. A delicate touch, a feeling for the values of words, makes them unusually attractive, though at times they become a bit "mannered," a little too precise. A pleasant fragrance of dried rose leaves and lavender seems to linger about the little book.

QUERIES AND ANSWERS

ANSWERS BY THE EDITOR

F. G. D.—Can you tell me when and by whom Christmas cards were first printed for sale? Who was the originator of the cards?

It is very difficult to determine the origin of Christmas cards, but it is said that the Rev. Edward Bradley (Cuthbert Bede) was the designer of the first printed Christmas card. He entered Durham College in England in 1845 and at the end of his first year there sent the designs of a picture card to a Mr. Lambert, a printer at Newcastle, to be printed for private circulation among his relatives and friends at Christmas and New Year's Day. Similar cards with different designs were printed for Bradley in 1846 and 1847. During the latter part of 1847 copies of these cards were placed on the market by Bradley's printer, and these are believed to have been the first Christmas cards ever offered for sale. Mr. Bradley was the author of "The Adventure of Mr. Verdant Green," "Love's Provocations," "Tales of College Life," and many other works. He also wrote a book of "Fairy Fables," and was a frequent contributor to Punch and other English periodicals. He died in 1890.

"The Mistletoe Bough"

W. R. W.—Will the editor kindly tell me where I can find the complete poem called "The Mistletoe Bough," in which Young Lovell is one of the principal characters?

The poem "The Mistletoe Bough," which recites the misadventure of Young Lovell's bride, who in a joyous mood hides from her husband in an old oak chest, the lid of which closed down upon her so that she could not open it, and in which her skeleton was found many years after, was written by Thomas Haynes Bayly (1797-1839.) It is printed in Bryant's "Library of Poetry and Song," Stevenson's "Home Book of Verse," and in many other collections of poetry.

"Century of Dishonor"

R. H. G.—Will you please tell me who wrote "A Century of Dishonor," and by whom was it published?

"A Century of Dishonor" was written by Mrs. Helen Hunt Jackson, author of "Ramona" and other books. It was first published in 1881, but this edition is out of print. A later edition was published by Little, Brown & Co., Boston, where copies of the book may be obtained.

Works of the Rev. John Flavel

EMERSON BROOKS.—Can you give me an idea of the rarity or value of "The Whole Works of the Rev. Mr. John Flavel, late Minister at Dartmouth, in Devon, in two volumes." Printed for John Nicholson, London, in 1716. Second edition.

John Flavel, Presbyterian divine, a voluminous and popular author, died in 1691. The 1716 edition of his "works" is not of special value.

"Little Boy That Died"

LOUISE B. BOYD.—Will you let me know where I can find the complete poem of which I remember only the following:

I am all alone in my chamber now,
And the midnight hour is near;
The fagots crack and the clock's dull tick
Are the only sounds I hear.

The poem for which our correspondent asks is "The Little Boy That Died," by J. D. Robinson. It is printed in "Choice Selections No. 7," published by the Penn Publishing Company of Philadelphia, and in several other collections of verse.

ANSWERS FROM READERS

ADELAIDE M. PRIME.—"B. U.," in the Sept. 16 BOOK REVIEW, quotes from "The Adopted Child," by Mrs. Hemans. The poem of forty-eight lines can be found in any edition of her verse, or on Pages 141 and 142 of the "National Third Reader," popular in the schools forty years ago. The first stanza is as follows:

Why wouldst thou leave me, O gentle child?
Thy home on the mountain is bleak and wild—
A straw-roofed cabin with lowly wall;
Mine is a fair and pillared hall,
Where many an image of marble gleams,
And the sunshine of pictures forever streams.

Answers to this appeal have been also received from Dorothy Batchford, Metuchen, N. J.; E. E. Spender, Rockville Centre, L. I.; Adela F. Smith, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mabel L. Mills, Amherst, Mass.; John George McCarthy, New York; Iona M. Logie, Fordham, N. Y.; E. H. Shelton, East Orange, N. J.; Mrs. Colwell Lane, Freehold, N. J.; V. T. Arts, Chicago, Ill.; John R. Norcross, Brooklyn; H. M. Bierer, Brooklyn; Kate Darcy, Cornwall-on-Hudson, N. Y.; James Terry White, New York; Mary J. Dean, Jamaica, N. Y.; P. A. Walsh, New York; Ann Sterling Chalmers, Staten Island, N. Y.; Claudia A. Woodworth, Kansas City, Mo.; Beatrice Michaels, Hartford, Conn.; Margaret Gallagher Gannon, Geneva, N. Y.; E. W. Weston, Grand Rapids, Mich.; H. G. Craig, Louisville, Ky.; E. Bauer, Kewanee, Ill., and Anne Cary Bradley.

It Is From "Pinafore"

J. S. CARPENTER.—In reply to the query of C. J. Dumville on Aug. 5, would say that the quotation is from the second act of the Gilbert and Sullivan opera, "Pinafore." The correct wording is: "Oh, then your Lordship is of opinion that married happiness is not inconsistent with discrepancy in rank?" It will be found in the short dialogue between Josephine and Sir Joseph Porter just before the singing of the "Bell Trio."

The query was answered also by H. B. Green, New York; B. F. Casewell, Waldenon-Hudson, N. Y.; Beatrice Fischer, Brooklyn, N. Y.; S. Rosenbaum, New York; Horatio G. Cozzens, New York.

"Give Me a Book"

P. S. H.—I have just been reading the first verse of the poem "Give Me a Book," by Margret Denbo, quoted Aug. 5 by "F. M." in reply to "R. L." and find it a pretty close copy of the second verse of Ben Jonson's well known "Freedom in Dress," (published in "Old English Love Songs," by the Macmillan Company as "The Sweet Delight.")

The following are Jonson's lines, taken from Bryant's "Library of Poetry and Song":

Give me a look, give me a face,
That makes simplicity a grace;
Robes loosely flowing, hair as free—
Such sweet neglect more taketh me
Than all the adulteries of art,
They strike mine eyes, but not my heart.

In the Macmillan version the last two lines are:

Than all the adulteries of art,
That strike mine eyes, but not my heart.

Another Hagar Poem

I. E. M.—In your reply to a query of "H. S. H." for a poem, "Hagar," would say that the stanzas of Mary Tighe's poem which were sent you are but part of a longer poem, which is given in full, together with several others, with the same title, in Kohut's collection, "A Hebrew Anthology."

By Eliza J. P. Nicholson

DR. FRITZ J. KIMSEY.—In your issue of July 29 the poem "For the South's Gone Dry" from The Houston Post, is taken almost bodily from the poem "Drying Dixie Land," which appeared in The Chicago Post in September, 1907.

"The Secret Garden"

EMILY R. SUGDEN.—I think the short story referred to by "J. D. L." in THE BOOK REVIEW of Aug. 19 was written by Coningsby Dawson and published six or seven years ago in The American Magazine.

APPEALS TO READERS

C. CUMMINGS.—Will some kind reader recall for me the poem from which the following is quoted:

And as I lay my burden at this minster gate,
Kneeling in prayer and unashamed to pray,
The tumult of the time disconsolate,
To inarticulate murmurs dies away,
While the eternal ages watch and wait.

One Bottle More

M. WOODS.—Will some reader kindly tell me in what volume of Irish songs and ballads the following occurs:

One bottle more, one bottle more,
And friendship detains us
For one bottle more.

"Eureka"

C. D.—Maybe some one of your readers can inform me where I may be able to find a copy of "Eureka," a three-volume work on the "Apocalypse," by Dr. Thomas. I would appreciate the information.

Man's Highest Triumph

A. F. TOBIN.—Can any reader tell me the source of the quotation following, which I believe is incomplete:

Man's highest triumph, man's profoundest fall,
The deathbed of the just is yet undrawn
By mortal hands;
It merits a Divine.
Angels should paint it.
Angels ever there,
There on a post of honor and of joy.

Gate at End of Road

L. L. D.—Can any of your readers help locate a poem called "The Gate at the End of the Road" and also name the author? It runs something like this:

If you do • • • you will not regret it
When you come to the gate at the end of the road.

Garden and a Tree

W. A. R.—I would like very much to get the complete poem, I think by Bourdillon, in which the following lines appear:

And happy must all childhood be
That knows a garden and a tree;
Yet sin and sorrow's pedigree
Sprang from a garden and a tree.

Signs of Rain

G. F. N.—Can any reader tell me where I can get the rhyming jingle entitled "Forty Signs of Rain"?

Life's Garden

N. C. B.—Can any of the readers of your paper tell me if the following poem is quoted correctly, and who wrote it:

Out in Life's Garden, where sympathy grew,
God planted a Soul, 'twas the Soul of you.

There in Life's Garden Love seeking went through,
'Til he found a Heart, 'twas the Heart of you.

I've searched through Life's Garden of roses and rue,
And I find one sweet blossom all covered with dew.

Love, Sympathy, Faith, all unchanging and true,
Are the Heart of my flower, dear girl, 'tis you.

WITH AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS

A STUDY of "The Foreign Policy of President Wilson, 1913-1917," by Edgar E. Robinson and Victor J. West of the Department of History, Stanford University, is announced for publication toward the end of this month by the Macmillan Company. The authors believe that much of the criticism of Mr. Wilson's foreign policies is due to misunderstanding of its scope and purpose and to misapprehension of its historical background, and they hope that the narrative and explanation presented in their book will help to clarify the public's conception of their aim and meaning.

Edie Fisher Wood, whose "Notebook of an Attaché" attracted attention during the first year of the war, has been released from service by the British Government, in whose army he had won the rank of Major, and will at once resume service in the American Army, in which he will be Major in the Eighty-third Infantry. A new volume by him, "The Notebook of an Intelligence Officer," which the Century Company will publish some time this month, is said to be a graphic narrative of the fighting in which he took part and of the transporting, housing, and training of the troops.

E. P. Dutton & Co. announce the twelfth large edition of Donald Hankey's "A Student in Arms, First Series," which they published last March, and the fifth of the "Second Series," which they brought out three or four months later.

Sinclair Lewis, whose latest story, "The Innocents," has just been published by the Harpers, has left New York, where he had been since his return from his motor and camping trip with Mrs. Lewis to the Pacific Coast, and with his family has gone to Minneapolis to spend the Winter.

Indiana celebrated James Whitcomb Riley's birthday on Oct. 5 by means of special programs in all schools, public, private, and parochial, and in the churches.

Doubleday, Page & Co. will publish on Oct. 31 a Geographical Manual and New Atlas edited by C. S. Mawson, which will contain 250 maps brought up to date, indexed war area maps taken from those used by the British General Staff, and many articles of geographical description and information.

A. Hyatt Verrill, whose "Book of the West Indies" E. P. Dutton & Co. will publish about the middle of October, has spent much time in those islands, having lived, explored, or traveled there a goodly part of the time during the last quarter century. He has aimed to make his work a complete handbook of the West Indies, suitable for general reading, for the tourist, and for the business man.

"El Hispanismo en Norte-America," a history of Spanish literary criticism in the United States, by M. Romera-Navarro of the University of Pennsylvania, has just been published in Madrid.

Among Boni & Liveright's early publications will be "Utopia of Usurers," by Gilbert K. Chesterton.

Judd Mortimer Lewis, whose poems of the Southwest, "Christmas Days," will be published this Fall by Robert J. Shores, conducts a daily column in The Houston Post, in which many of his poems of childhood have appeared.

The John Lane Company announces for immediate publication "Gardens Overseas and Other Poems," by Thomas Walsh, containing both original work and some translations from South American poets.

Notwithstanding the large number and varied character of the books she turns out, Carolyn Wells works only five hours a day four days of the week, and that only during the Fall and Winter months. But a five-hour day means for her usually an achievement of five thousand words.

"Pictures of Ruined Belgium," which the John Lane Company has ready for issue, contains seventy-two pen-and-ink sketches drawn by Louis Borden on the spot, showing the devastation of the towns, villages, and countryside, and descriptions founded on official reports in both French and English text, the former written by George Verdaine, and the latter translated by J. Lewis May.

John Ames Mitchell, editor of Life, has written a novel, his first since "Pandora's Box," which the Stokes Company will publish this month. It will be called "Drowsy," and is said to be a story of love and mechanical genius which takes a daring and long look ahead of present-day knowledge and possibilities.

An edition de luxe of the complete works of O. Henry, in fourteen volumes, to be sold only by sets, and limited to 1,075 sets, is announced for early issue by Gabriel Wells at 480 Fifth Avenue, New York, who has acquired the rights for this edition only from Doubleday, Page & Co., who are O. Henry's authorized publishers. The material in the thirteenth and fourteenth volumes is said to have its first appearance in book form and to contain many hitherto unpublished stories and critical articles, and also biographical and bibliographical data. The illustrations will consist of about fifty character studies drawn for this edition by Gordon Grant.

A new story by Archibald Marshall, "Abingdon Abbey," promised for early issue by Dodd, Mead & Co., will continue his series of Trollope-like chronicles of English country life. Mr. Marshall lives in an old coast-guard settlement on the Essex coast, where, in addition to his reading and writing, he plays golf, shoots a little, and walks a great deal. He does also much journalistic work, which makes it necessary for him to spend considerable time in London.

"Three Plays," by David Pinski, will be brought out by B. W. Huebsch this Fall. These new plays, as well as his former drama, "The Treasure," have been translated from the Yiddish. Mr. Pinski lives in New York, where he is editor of a Yiddish weekly newspaper.

In a new book on "The Art Theatre," which Alfred A. Knopf will publish this week, Sheldon Cheney discusses the subject of the commercial theatre, shows where the little theatres have failed, and argues for the art theatre as a solution of the problem.

W. W. Cumberland, manager of the Markets Information Service of Minnesota's Commission of Public Safety, is the author of a timely book, which the Princeton University Press will publish shortly, to be called "Co-operative Marketing." It is a practical treatment of marketing methods based on the experience of the citrus fruit growers of California, who have developed a very successful system of co-operation.

Olive Roberts Barton, author of a book for children called "Cloud Boat Stories," just published by Houghton Mifflin Company, is the sister of Mary Roberts Rinehart. She has written many juvenile stories for magazines and newspapers, but this is her first publication in book form.

An Arthur Rackham edition of the King Arthur stories, to be called "The Romance of King Arthur," will be published by the Macmillan Company Oct. 19. The illustrations by Arthur Rackham include sixteen page plates in color, and nearly a hundred other drawings—full pages, in black and white, head and tail pieces and decorations.

"For France," which Doubleday, Page & Co. will have ready this week, contains articles, stories, poems, pictures by well-known American authors, artists, actors, and others, among whom are William Dean Howells, Julia Marlowe, John Burroughs, Mrs. Atherton, Edgar Lee Masters, Gouverneur Morris, Mrs. Fiske, E. H. Sothern.

Alonzo Rothschild's "Honest Abe," a successor to his "Lincoln, Master of Men," is ready for immediate publication by Houghton Mifflin Company. It was Mr. Rothschild's plan to write a cycle of Lincoln books viewing his character and achievements from different angles. The new book deals with Lincoln's life down to his election to Congress, and focuses its study upon his integrity of character. Mr. Rothschild died last year, but left this manuscript practically completed.

Winifred Kirkland's descriptive sketch, "Christmas in Littleville," which appeared last year in the Atlantic Monthly, has been put into booklet form in dove gray boards by E. P. Dutton & Co. under a new title, "My Little Town."

A Christmas book by Richard Aumerle Maher, which the Macmillans will publish this week, is called "While Shepherds Watched," and tells the story of the first Christmas.

A new David Grayson book, "Great Possessions," is ready for immediate issue by Doubleday, Page & Co.

SPANISH ARCHITECTURE

SPANISH ARCHITECTURE OF THE SIXTEENTH CENTURY. General View of the Plateresque and Herrera Styles. By Arthur Byne and Mildred Stapley. With 89 Plates and 140 Illustrations in the Text, from Drawings and Photographs by Arthur Byne. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $7.50.

THIS handsome, weighty, and richly illustrated volume on Spanish architecture in the sixteenth century is written to fill a blank space in the history of architecture. The buildings of the Gothic period in Spain have been explored and published by critics and historians of authority. The Renaissance century, which was an epoch of civil rather than ecclesiastical building, has been the subject of considerable archaeological research, "but, meanwhile," the present authors affirm, "the really helpful thing, graphic presentation and sound criticism, is woefully neglected." The finest specimens of the period are falling to pieces, and if the historian should wait until all the disputed dates and names are satisfactorily determined he would have "nothing but a memory to discuss."

The actual buildings merit the full attention given them. Renaissance architecture in Spain combines the earlier with the later styles and presents a type unlike any other of the period, distinct from the semi-Moorish stucco of Andalusia, which has been unduly insisted upon as typical of Spain. To make the latter stand for the whole of Spanish architecture "simply means that the buildings of Castile, the very heart of the country, have been passed over for a type acknowledged by all Spaniards except Andalusians to be exotic." To centre attention upon the Castilian type and point out its particular charm is one aim of the book at hand.

Its pages are refreshing in their clear revelation of personal contact with the country and race, and of the intimate connection between these and the architecture. Although in description of individual buildings the details of ornament and the manner of structure are discussed from the technical point of view and with liberal evidences of study and professional experience, the fact that architecture more than any of the arts is an expression of human character is constantly recalled. Even for the casual reader who is neither a student of art nor a familiar of Spain there is ample delight in following the course of the text from the work of Enrique de Egas, who took a hesitating step from the old Gothic to the new Renaissance, through the monuments of Alcala and Burgos, Salamanca, veritable museum of the sculpture of the gifted Berruguete, through the Castilian towns, through Seville, Granada, Saragossa, until the work of Herrera under Philip II. brings us to the end of the century and the establishment of an official type of art which reached its highest expression in the Escorial, which was erected north of Madrid from the plans of Juan Bautista de Toledo and completed by Herrera, a mighty monument to the religious severity of Philip's mood. The work that followed is that of Herrera alone, more of an engineer than an architect, cold and pedantic, like his royal master, and the father of a perfunctory school of building.

OLD MAN CURRY

OLD MAN CURRY. By Charles Van Loan. New York: George H. Doran Company. $1.35.

Not since David Harum delighted his country-wide audience with the garnered wisdom of the rustic world have we had a hero whose talk was such a mosaic of wise saws. Old Man Curry takes his wisdom from but one source and finds in the Proverbs of Solomon warrant for his shrewdness, his kindness, his readiness to match guile with guile, and his useful gift of telling the truth to deceive. To a reader of ignorant race-track life in the West the unpleasantness of the revelations of cheating and shabby trickery is offset by the surprise of finding cheating the cheater so easy a game.

That useful friend of modern drama, the Greek Chorus, is represented by the Bald-faced Kid to whom is explained, for the reader's benefit, the meaning of each "miracle" narrated. The lover of horses and good stories will find ample entertainment for the proverbial idle hour in Old Man Curry's successful effort to live up to his ideals on the race track, and while the extreme novelty of his Biblical quotations for the audience to which he addressed them undoubtedly lent something to their force, their applicability in modern instances will amuse the more initiated.

IMPRESSIONS

IMPRESSIONS. By Beatrice B. Bernheim. Illustrated. New York: The Vail-Ballou Co.

A pleasing sequence of "impressions" of sights and experiences in travel has been made by Mrs. Bernheim in verse and brought together in this little volume with illustrations from photographs of some of the places visited. In the first section the author starts by steamer eastward, visits the Azores, Spain, Italy, Switzerland, and Germany. In the second section she starts from New York westward by train and sees the Grand Canyon, goes on to Southern California, thence to San Francisco, and homeward again past the Great Salt Lake and through Colorado.

Of the European trip these lines, beginning an "impression" of Seville, are representative:

Of all Spanish cities Seville's the most gay;
Both laughter and frolic by night and by day.
Its women are fair and its men are most courtly,
The crowds on the corners ever arguing hotly,
The women selling papers and frying hot cakes,
The men on their donkeys the produce do take
From their farms in the country to the city to sell,
While the poor little children only flatter too well.

On the trip to the Pacific Coast, although most of the verses describe famous scenes of beauty and grandeur, one little poem gives an impression of a well-known mail order house in Chicago that strikes a different note. It begins:

A park, some buildings, and a baseball field,
Enter you door and many wonders are revealed:
Twelve thousand souls at constant toil,
Perfect regulation and no turmoil.

All the proceeds from sales of the book are donated by Mrs. Bernheim to the Red Cross.

GONE TO EARTH
By Mary Webb, author of "The Golden Arrow"
The New York Evening Post says:—"Fidelity to nature that marks the early character description of Gone to Earth and the mingling of humor and beauty in the novel is rarely well done. The picture of the half gypsy girl with tawny hair and the feet of a born dancer, with her pet fox and her kindness to all things; the sketch of the abstracted, callous old harper with whom she has no tie but one of blood will not be forgotten easily."

What is a woman's greatest charm?

A woman's greatest charm is not her beauty. It is not her complexion, or her eyes or the way she wears her hair. It is not her intellect or even her personality

A WOMAN'S greatest charm is her energy. Energy goes by many names:—it is health, vitality, magnetism, life. By whatever name you call it, Energy underlies all other charms.

Energy makes a woman attractive

The woman who conserves her energy is never out of sorts. Her conversation is animated. Her eyes are bright. When she walks, it is with easy grace. She radiates vitality. What she has to do, in her home, in her office, in her clubs, in society, she does thoroughly and well, without worry or fatigue.

Men admire her because she is never dull, never cross, never a tired-out bore. She accomplishes much more in life, is much more charming, and is happier than the woman who wastes her energy in many needless ways.

The woman who wastes her energy is seldom charming. Lack of energy means loss of beauty. Her eyes lack sparkle. Her conversation is dull. She is not attractive to other women or to men. People are not interested in her because she is not interesting.

A modern heroine's strenuous day

The day is past when a fiction heroine can be "sickly" and still be a heroine. The modern heroine's complexion is tanned by outdoor life. She can hike five miles, play a stiff game of tennis, do a hard day's shopping, and dance twenty dances in the evening without being overcome by fatigue

Such a day of activity is impossible, however, for many modern women. Why?

How woman wastes her charms

The reason is that women waste their Energy. They are not guilty of any one big energy waste. But their supply of Energy is drained by a number of little taxes on their vitality which can be stopped.

In walking, for example, most women waste Energy. Walking is a splendid exercise. But no woman should walk in the city unless her feet are properly shod for the city streets.

A woman wastes valuable Energy by wearing leather heels.

Leather and wooden heels are totally unsuited for city pavements because they are so hard.

Every day the average woman takes 8,000 steps. That means 8,000 shocks when the hard heels hit hard sidewalks and floors. Each shock jars just a little Energy out of her system. These little energy wastes multiplied by 8,000 mean a large drain on the woman's vitality. Every time you bring your leather shod foot down, you are wasting some of your greatest charm!

What wallflowers lack

The popular woman has vivacity, personality, magnetism, charm—in short Energy! You can't have energy in the evening if you pound it away all day on hard floors and pavements with hard leather and wooden heels. O'Sullivan's Heels save your energy.

Make shopping a real pleasure

If shopping wears you out, blame your leather heels. Wear O'Sullivan's Heels, and know what it is to shop without fatigue.

When HE comes home

Are you too tired to brighten his evening after his work? Household duties and the children wear you out. You waste energy by clattering about on hard leather or wooden heels. Stop this useless drain on your energy by wearing O'Sullivan's Heels.

The walk women want

You want to walk with buoyancy and grace. Save your energy if you can. O'Sullivan's Heels save energy and give your walk the desired easy grace.

Stopping the energy wastes

Every woman can stop this energy waste by wearing O'Sullivan's Heels They are little individual shock absorbers They absorb these 8,000 daily shocks. They take the strain off your spine.

The woman who wears O'Sullivan's Heels walks with greater ease and grace than the one who clatters along on hard, nail-studded heels. The energy thus saved is added to her charm.

You should have O'Sullivan's Heels put on your shoes at once—if you want to conserve your Energy. They are not only comfortable—they are fashionable. You'll see many worn on Fifth Avenue any afternoon. One out of every four New Yorkers wears them. You'll notice the wearers have a more springy, energetic step than those who wear leather heels.

Not only do their energy-saving advantages recommend them to many women, but they are also far more economical than leather heels. O'Sullivan's Heels last three times as long as leather heels—and they keep your shoes in shape better, and make them last longer.

The best heels for city wear

The heels best suited to modern hard pavements and floors are O'Sullivan's Heels.

They are guaranteed to outlast any other heels. They will last three times as long as leather heels and will give uniformly satisfactory service to the very last.

Because of our special process, O'Sullivan's Heels combine the greatest durability with the greatest resiliency. They are made of the perfect heel material.

Buy your new shoes O'Sullivanized. Good dealers sell the latest style shoes with O'Sullivan's Heels already attached. Have O'Sullivan's put on all your shoes at once. Every day you delay putting on O'Sullivan's Heels, you are wasting your most valuable asset—Energy.

In black, white or tan; for men, women and children. Insist on O'Sullivan's. Avoid the disappointment of substitutes.

WOULD you guess that this was just a little "cove" on a small lawn of a New York suburban home—probably no larger than yours? Are you ready to believe that we can give you the very same effect of a secluded retreat, shut off completely from the bustling world just beyond? We can—thanks to the skill of many years in planting evergreens with judgment and knowledge. What's more, this screen of pines completely hides a laundry "back-yard." Thus your neighbors get only pleasant sylvan views from their porch and windows, and you do, from yours and you have besides an outdoor living-room for rest and study and fun and hospitality—not merely in Summer, mind you, but on any pleasant day throughout the year, thanks to the evergreen glow and cordiality of the pines. The cost is ridiculously cheap for so much benefit. Let's tell you all about it—now—for now is the "Ideal Fall-planting-time" you have heard so much about.

PARKER'S METHOD OF HAIR TREATMENT

and HERBEX HAIR TONICS maintain HEALTHY HAIR and prevent Unnatural Hair & Scalp Conditions. They assist Nature in restoring normal, healthy conditions by stimulating and revitalizing the hair growing processes.

Forty years' test has demonstrated their efficacy; many thousand patrons testify to their beneficial value. Healthy hair needs attention. Incipient hair and scalp disorders grow worse by neglect. Send description of your hair and scalp condition, general physical health, and age, and I will suggest proper treatment and tonics. Booklet T, "Healthy Hair," free on request.

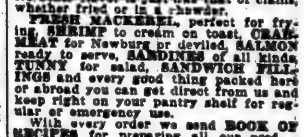
Salt Mackerel
CODFISH, FRESH LOBSTER



FAMILIES who are fond of FISH can be supplied DIRECT from GLOUCESTER, MASS., by the FRANK E. DAVIS COMPANY, with newly caught, KEEPABLE OCEAN FISH, choicer than any inland dealer could possibly furnish.

We sell ONLY TO THE CONSUMER DIRECT, sending by EXPRESS RIGHT TO YOUR HOME. We PREPAY express on all orders east of Kansas. Our fish are pure, appetising and economical and we want YOU to try some, payment subject to your approval.

SALT MACKEREL, fat, meaty, juicy fish, are delicious for breakfast. They are freshly packed in brine and will not spoil on your hands.

CODFISH, as we salt it, is white, boneless and ready for instant use. It makes a substantial meal, a fine change from meat, at a much lower cost.

FRESH LOBSTER is the best thing known for salads. Right fresh from the water, our lobsters simply are boiled and packed in PARCHMENT-LINED CANS. They come to you as the purest and safest lobsters you can buy and the meat is as crisp and natural as if you took it from the shell yourself.

FRIED CLAMS is a reliable, hearty dish, that your whole family will enjoy. No other flavor is just like that of clams, whether fried or in a chowder.

FRESH MACKEREL, perfect for frying, SHRIMP to creám on toast, CRAB-MEAT for Newburg or deviled, SALMON ready to serve, SARDINES of all kinds, TUNNY for salad, SANDWICH FILLINGS and every good thing packed here or abroad you can get direct from us and keep right on your pantry shelf for regular or emergency use.

With every order we send BOOK OF RECIPES for preparing all our products. Write for it. Our list tells how each kind of fish is put up, with the delivered price, so you can choose just what you will enjoy most. Send the coupon for it now.

They Always Make Good

Lillian Russell's OWN SMOOTHOUT CREAM

It Velvetizes the Skin

"YOU know that wonderful feeling of pure joy which descends upon you as you change into soft, loose clothing after a refreshing tub? Well, that's just the way your face feels when you smooth out all its tired tissues and tense muscles with my own Smoothout Cream.

"As soon as it touches your cheeks Smoothout liquefies and is swallowed up thirstily by the tiny pores. Cooling, soothing, delightful.

"Pat it into your face with the finger tips. Smoothout restores to the tissues the elasticity of youth, cleanses the pores, clears the blemishes and velvetizes the skin.

"Just astringent enough to refine the pores and make a splendid base for face powder.

Washing Without Work

This truly wonderful machine has revolutionized washing. It fits in any stationary washtub and does all the washing, rinsing and wringing by electricity.

All you need do is turn on the switch. The clothes are washed cleaner and whiter than ever before and in the most sanitary way.

The machine washes delicate laces and lingerie without injury; also heavy blankets and small rugs. Clothes washed in it last six times as long as those washed on the rubbing board or at laundries.

MODERN HOME WASHER

"FITS IN ANY TUB"

This is the only washing machine of its kind that fits and operates in stationary washtubs and stores in the tub, out of the way, when not in use. It is a great boon in apartments and small kitchens where there is no room for a heavy, bulky washing machine, in the way all the week.

The Modern Home Washer saves its cost many times over each year in wash woman expense and clothes savings. It solves the servant problem and the cost of electricity is only about three cents for a week's washing.

Tested and approved by Good Housekeeping Institute and the Tribune Institute. Awarded a medal at Panama Pacific Exposition. Portable machine for use where there are no stationary tubs. Hand Power machine $15.00, no extra tub to pay for. Write or telephone for Catalog today.

Madonna Lilies

Lilium Candidum

THE favorite Lily of the old-fashioned garden produces strong, stiff stems, studded with a mass of pure, glistening white flowers that enliven the perennial flower garden, or, for contrast with the beautiful green shrubs of the June garden, are unequaled.

Plant During Month of October and enjoy a big crop of flowers next June, or pot up, store in coldframe, and force for early winter in the greenhouse or conservatory.

Our bulbs of this splendid Lily are grown in Northern France, and are the true thick-petaled variety, which is much superior in habit and flowering qualities to that of the cheap, loose, Southern-grown bulbs.

and what lies back of them. How the higher paid workers of the silk world have been gathered together to produce fabrics of unusual and exquisite beauty.

Silk is a rare product—it cannot be handled or woven or colored as are cotton and wool. Rather it must be fabricated in the old-time spirit of the silversmiths and goldsmiths of the middle ages who worked for the love of working and were untiring in their efforts to make each piece a masterpiece.

The modern commercial life does not permit the full realization of such an idea as this, for the simple reason that time is worth more today than it was three hundred years ago. Were it not for this, no doubt many arts and crafts of today would be conducted in that old-time spirit of innate, hand-wrought perfection.

But even today in busy America the real fundamental of such work as that can be observed—and in one instance at least is carried out—with the modern element of time-saving incorporated into it for its genuine betterment.

The Spirit of the Workers of Old

That instance is the making of Cheney Silks. Every yard of Cheney Silks—every dainty thread, every artistic design, every lovely color—is planned and made in the same essential spirit that moved the olden Guilds and Halls of Goldsmiths, Tapestry Makers, Wood Carvers and other arts of long ago.

This spirit has many manifestations. It created fabrics that are the first word of style—and it looks after the schooling of the worker's children. It produces a quality which nothing else could reach or maintain — and it provides swimming pools and dances for the refreshment and recreation of even the lowliest of the thousands who work in its shadow. It speeds up the looms by every known contrivance of modern engineering skill—and it plans and puts into action a pension system to remove the dread of unproductive old age from every mind which contributes to it.

Beautiful Surroundings Make Beautiful Results

And all this is carried out in the peaceful, healthful country—far from the grinding strain on nerves and brains which the city creates.

Up in the quiet hills of Connecticut the Cheney Mills are set in a beautiful park where tall trees give shade and where green grass invites and rests the eye. Every device which thought and skill can produce is there to make life clean, contented, safe. Pretty homes are available, gardens abound, schools are convenient and are equipped to the utmost.

Is it not natural that workers in an atmosphere such as this do more work and better work than in the average condition?

Constant Planning to Forestall Dame Fashion

All of these things are plainly visible to anyone who visits South Manchester—and are reflected in the happy faces of all the Cheney workers. It makes you glad to wear Cheney Silks because you feel that the making was pleasant to someone else—a sensation all too rare in these days.

But there is something else there which you would not see—something which you only realize when you compare Cheney Silks with others. And that is the inexpressible sense of style—the exquisite touch of taste in color and line—the delight that comes from seeing and wearing silk which has that indefinable quality so poorly and boldly expressed by the modern word "novelty."

—and More Than Novelty

Novelty the Cheney Silks have—along with that wonderful quality made possible only by years of skill and experience. But the beauty of Cheney Silks does not depend on novelty merely. That may be crude and inharmonious and still be novelty. Cheney Silks are novel—but they have at the same time taste, grace, harmony, aristocracy—call it what you will so long as you realize that it is always good.

The first whisper of coming fashion reaches the Cheneys—and its underlying ideals are at once analyzed, sifted and criticised. What is good and true art is accepted—what is merely a straining after the new, anything so long as it is new—is cast aside as unworthy of Cheney and unworthy to offer to American women.

And then—improved, beautified, modernized—the result becomes one of the Cheney Silks—one of the long line of triumphs which have made the name of Cheney a standard for generations.

Zantine
the all-becoming silk

This—the newest of the leaders for Fall—is a typical Cheney creation. Its wonderful blending of many pastel colors, its new-born harmony of design, its exquisite good taste, all unite to make it—a Cheney Silk. For street or house gowns, negligees or linings—for blonde, brunette or in between—for stout, slim or normal figures—Zantine so adorns and beautifies that it is well called the all-becoming Silk.

Exquisite Nails without cutting the cuticle

Cutting ruins the cuticle—gives you rough, ragged edges and makes hangnails

DON'T cut or trim the cuticle. Read how to give your nails the most delightful manicure you have ever had!

Start today to have the shapely, well-kept nails that make any hand lovely. See how smooth and firm the use of Cutex will make your cuticle without trimming or cutting it. See how easily and quickly you can give your nails a wonderful manicure.

What specialists say about cutting the cuticle

Shoemaker, the famous skin specialist, says: "Some persons are so obtuse to the beauty of the delicate edge of skin at the base of the nail, that they actually trim it away, leaving an ugly red rim like the edge of an inflamed eyelid."

Over and over specialists repeat the advice—"Do not cut the cuticle; it is dangerous." "Under no circumstances should scissors or knife touch the cuticle!"

At last a way to have a perfect manicure

Send for the Midget Manicure Set offered below and see how completely Cutex solves your problem.

Elsie Janis, whose vivacity and clever acting have made her a favorite in every American city, says: "I am delighted with Cutex. I have just finished my nails and find it most wonderful."

After you have filed your nails to the proper length and shape, gently work around the base of the nail with Cutex, pushing back the cuticle.

Janet Beecher, one of the finest emotional actresses there is, says: "When I saw what a smooth edge Cutex gave my cuticle, how beautifully shaped it made the base of my nails, I made my maid use it always."

A touch of Cutex Nail White underneath the nails gives them snowy white tips.

Finish with Cutex Nail Polish. Gives you just the transparent, waterproof finish you want.

In the Cutex package you will find an orange stick and absorbent cotton. Wrap a little cotton around the end of the orange stick and dip it into the bottle. Work the stick around the base of the nail, gently pushing back the cuticle.

Almost at once you will find you can wipe off the dead cuticle. Then carefully rinse off the fingers in clear water.

A touch of Cutex Nail White underneath the nails makes them immaculately clean—snow-white.

Finish with Cutex Nail Polish. Cutex Cake Polish rubbed on the palm of the hand and passed quickly over the nails gives just the soft, waterproof finish you want. If you like an especially brilliant sheen, use Cutex Paste Polish first, then the Cake Polish.

You will not know your nails after their first Cutex manicure

Until you have used Cutex you cannot know what a great improvement the first application makes.

Even when the cuticle has been broken and mutilated by cutting, Cutex restores the firm, smooth outline at the base of the nail. Try it. See how quickly all your nail troubles disappear.

Buy Cutex in all drug or department stores

Cutex, the cuticle remover, comes in 50c bottles with an introductory size at 25c. The 50c size is the more economical size to buy. It lasts three times as long as the 25c size. Extra large size bottles $1.00. Cutex Nail White is 25c. Cutex Nail Polish in cake, paste, powder, liquid or stick form is 25c. Cutex Cuticle Comfort for sore or tender cuticle is also 25c. If your store has not yet secured its stock, write direct.

INFORMAL STEPS TOWARD PEACE

Unofficial Conference Suggested, to Deliberate Without Detriment to Most Vigorous Prosecution of War Against Germany

By CHARLES W. ELIOT,
President Emeritus of Harvard.

THE comments on my article entitled "Is an Informal Peace Conference Now Possible?" published in THE TIMES of Aug. 27, which have come to my notice in the public press, my private correspondence, and in conversation, have satisfied me that the proposal made in that article has failed to obtain access to the mind of the thinking public. Three reasons for this failure seem to be: (1) The phrase, "the military situation today is described fairly well by the word stalemate," threw many readers into an adverse frame of mind at the start. (2) Some readers came to the hasty conclusion that I must have abandoned the opinions they and I had long held about the right issues of the war. (3) Some sanguine persons who have all along been sure that the war would soon be brought to a satisfactory conclusion by the heavy defeat of Germany, or who have believed since the 4th of April last that the entry of America into the war would soon bring triumph to the Entente Allies, resented my proposal on the ground that it was no time to speak of peace, on any terms or by any means whatever; for any talk of peace would or might diminish the ardor of the opponents of Germany in prosecuting the war to a victorious conclusion—which they esteemed the only tolerable issue of the conflict.

I ask your permission to discuss in your valued paper the weight of these three reasons for not considering my proposal.

(1) The word "stalemate" was not well chosen; for it is not true of either group of combatants in Europe that it cannot move without being checked. Nevertheless, for each party the fighting is thus far inconclusive. It is true that the French and British armies can drive the German armies back for short distances, and that the French and British artillery has demonstrated its superiority to the German artillery on the French front, as I stated in my article of Aug. 27, immediately after I used the word stalemate. These demonstrated gains, however, are far from being conclusive, except by slow degrees over a long period. Within the four weeks just passed, the Italian and German successes on other fronts balance each other fairly well and leave the military situation still an indecisive one, although the German energy is declining somewhat and the combined forces of her adversaries are mounting. On the seas, the defense against submarines near Great Britain has apparently made some gains; and it is probable that the German Government has lost confidence in the submarine as the means of subduing England, France, and Italy to her will. The supplying of the allied armies in and near Saloniki is much impeded by submarines which lurk in the Aegean and its approaches. Nothing that has happened since the 21st of August—the date at which the article published on Aug. 27 was written—has impaired the accuracy of the following statement made in that article: "Because of the superiority of the Entente Allies and the United States in number of men, industrial productiveness, and financial strength, Germany in all probability can be reduced to a condition of exhaustion before the Entente Allies will be; but this result can be brought about only by prolonged sacrifices of human lives and of the savings of the nations, and at the cost of infinite human woe." Any one who doubts the accuracy of this statement will do well to consider how much territory on the western front has been recovered from German occupation during the past six months, what the condition of the recovered territory is, and how vigorous the German defense has been and is. Nevertheless, I do not assume that Germany cannot be overthrown by sheer force. On the contrary, I think she can be in time, though at fearful cost to humanity and civilization.

(2) To propose that the belligerent nations should now hold a conference of uninstructed delegates to consider feasible terms of peace does not imply any change of view on the proposer's part—or an indorser's—concerning the causes or the results of the war, or concerning the German practices in carrying on war, or the untrustworthiness of Germany in respect to treaties, pledges, and contracts. Since October, 1914, I have been warmly in favor of bringing help to France and Britain from the United States in their defense of both public and private liberty; and since that time I have advocated effective preparation for war on the part of the United States. Since the sinking of the Lusitania, I have been convinced that the present German Government is faithless with regard to all international contracts, treaties, or agreements; so that no other nation, or group of nations, can put confidence in any future assevgrations or pledges of that Government, until by a long course—ten years at least—of honorable conduct the Government and people of Germany have established a new reputation for truth and honesty, and for honor in international relations. Many months before war was declared in April last, I held that active participation of the United States in the war against Germany was the clear duty of the American people, and also that the United States should join the Entente Allies in an offensive and defensive alliance to prevent international war when the present war is over, and therefore should maintain a strong national army and navy based on universal training and universal liability to service in war. To be sure, in respect to the provision of a strong American army and navy based on universal training and liability to service it has thus far been quite impossible to bring Congress, or indeed the general public, to definite, far-reaching action—to the great disappointment of many American patriots; so that the army and navy of the United States at this moment rest on temporary or provisional enactments which provide only for enlistments for the war, or "the emergency." I hold all these opinions still; and advocacy of an informal conference concerning possible conditions of peace I believe to be entirely consistent with tenacious holding to them all. I venture to hope further that when the temporary enactments of the present Congress have taken effect, Congress will feel disposed to provide the country with a large, democratic, permanent army on the Swiss model. To that end—indispensable if the United States is to contribute to the prevention of war hereafter—most of the recent temporary arrangements will prove to be contributory.

(3) Some thoughtful Americans who read the article of Aug. 27, and more who read only the editorials against it, felt that no discussions about peace ought to be undertaken at present; because any discussion of that subject would diminish the ardor of the American people in the prosecution of the war on which they entered six months ago. Personally, I have too much faith in the soundness of the American people's reasons for going to war with Germany, and in their constancy and loyalty when they have once gone into a righteous war,

Informal Steps Toward Peace--By Charles W. Eliot

to feel any apprehension lest an informal, uninstructed conference on the principles of a just settlement of the international conflict should abate the proper fighting spirit of the American people, or their firm endurance. The people, but particularly the young men, have gone into this war to put down autocratic. Divine right government, to abolish the professional military class and secret diplomacy, to make justice or righteousness the governing principle in international relations, and to promote liberty among the masses of mankind. They will not lose their ardor in this righteous cause, or abate their efforts in even the least degree, because a conference is called—as a rational and humane experiment—to consider whether these objects cannot be accomplished without prosecuting the war to the exhaustion of the Central Monarchies, and if not, why not. The meeting of such a conference without an armistice would probably affect the immediate conduct of the war only to intensify the efforts of each party to obtain successes which would improve its position before a final authoritative conference.

Many of my critics, in public and in private, not only shied at my proposal; they also misapprehended it. I proposed nothing that can properly be called a peace negotiation. A real negotiation for peace must be conducted by the Governments that have been at war, and in these days of electrical communication might or might not be accompanied by an armistice without change of blockade or embargo. It will not be necessary to anticipate in Europe today any occurrence like the battle of New Orleans in our War of 1812, when American militia inflicted heavy losses on British veterans fresh from the Peninsular War weeks after the Treaty of Ghent had been signed. A worldwide armistice could be declared by telegraph, and could be ended by any belligerent in the same way. For such an authoritative negotiation neither the Entente Allies nor the Central Monarchies seem to be ready today, one party names terms obviously impossible in the present state of the fighting, and the other names only terms so vague or indefinite that no conference with power to make a treaty could safely be based on them. I suggested merely a preliminary conference of uninstructed delegates, appointed by the several belligerent Governments for the sole purpose of ascertaining, so far as may prove practicable, the state of public opinion in those countries concerning, first, "the means of so organizing the civilized world that international war can be prevented," and, secondly, "the removal or remedying in good measure of the public wrongs, injustices, and distrusts which contributed to the outbreak of the present war, or have been created during its course."

It is probable that the terrible sufferings and losses incurred in three years of intense warfare on an immense scale have produced modifications of effective public opinion on these matters in every one of the nations involved in the war. Everybody who looks can see plainly the striking changes in the Governmental and industrial conditions of all the nations concerned. It is probable that corresponding changes have occurred in the state of the public mind about international relations. For instance, it is not improbable that public opinion in both Europe and America could be brought to an agreement about the abandonment of secret diplomacy, and about ultimate control over questions of war or peace by elected representatives of the people. It is quite conceivable that a consultative conference might point the way to a method of satisfying the just claims of Poland in regard to its reconstitution, of France as regards the return of Alsace-Lorraine, and of Italy in respect to the rendition of Italian territories now subject to Austria. Even if the conference failed to come to unanimous conclusions on such topics as these, it would be very helpful—toward clarifying the motives for continued fighting—to know just what the minority nations are which dissent from projects approved by the majority. On every one of the subjects listed, first, twelve under the head of organizing the civilized world for the prevention of war, and, secondly, six under the head of rectifying public wrongs and injustices which contributed to the outbreak of the present war, it would be helpful toward a righteous and satisfactory issue of the war if the present opinion of the thinking people in each nation could be made known to all the nations. It would be helpful, for instance, to know just which nations would not consent to another conference at The Hague which should consider—among other things—the new arrangements necessitated by the use, not yet fully developed, of high explosives, submarines, airplanes, poisonous gases, and fire jets.

There are, indeed, many grounds for hope—not strong, but real—that the proposed conference might show the way to procure in time the stopping of the war, and the advent of peace on terms which promise a better world and larger freedom for all the nations. Germany has good reasons for desiring peace intensely. She knows that the objects she had in mind at the beginning of the war are absolutely unattainable. She is now fighting for a tolerable outcome which will not be humiliating, and for future security. Can she be relieved by an informal conference of her fears concerning armed invasion of her territory, an economic war against her at the conclusion of peace, and an irremediable congestion of her population? Can she be gratified in regard to her preference for an international guarantee of freedom of the seas in the place of a British usage? Will she be content after her experiences in these three years of war with the "open door" and "peaceful penetration" for the future? Will she abandon the doctrine that military necessity justifies the breaking of treaties? Has not Germany learned since August, 1914, like the rest of the world, that it is a vital international concern where the power of peace and war is lodged in each nation?

Certain events since the war broke out encourage the hope that all the civilized nations are prepared to recognize the tendency of modern societies to democratic organization and control. One great autocratic military empire—the Russian—has just disappeared. Important steps have been already taken to convert the British Empire into a British Commonwealth—not of a sudden, or on a logical scheme, but in the true British way of gradual experiment and growth. A striking step in this direction is the admission of trained Indian young men to commissions in the army of India. A considerable political revolution has occurred in Hungary since last May, a revolution which tends strongly toward democracy and a federation of democratic States in Southeastern Europe. The desire and need of heroic France for peace grows intense as her reserves become scantier and her sufferings severer. The objects for which the American people have gone into this war, as stated above, are somewhat different from those of any single European nation; but they are not less intensely felt. The people propose to obtain those objects no matter what it may cost; but they will be ready to attain those objects by a more intelligent method than by fighting and destruction, if the way opens thereto. The Americans are certainly intelligent and humane enough to prefer to spend $20,000,000,000 on stopping the war and repairing its damages so far as possible, provided that the war be settled justly, than to spend the same sum on the prosecution of the war—to say nothing of saving the lives of their sons. The proposed conference might not improbably show the way to exercise that preference.

When the American Army in Cuba had obtained a success by no means decisive, the United States proposed to the Spanish commanders that all Spanish troops which should surrender to the American commanders should be sent home to Spain at the expense of the American Government—a proposal which was promptly accepted. That was a wise way of stopping that little war; for it accomplished all the objects the American Government and people had in view at a cost insignificant compared with the cost of prosecuting the war till the Spanish forces were destroyed. In the present very different case the American people will gladly sacrifice money instead of sons, if they can discover the way to accomplish in that manner the objects for which they declared war on Germany.

The proposal does not contemplate a ceasing of the war, or any relaxation of its intensity until a conference shows that a righteous settlement can be reached without further fighting. It contemplates no armistice and no futile truce.

The control of large industries becomes more and more co-operative between owners and workmen. Free Governments dictate more and more what the conditions of labor shall be in the national industries, and undertake to regulate in the interest of the masses both prices and profits, and to prevent the accumulation of exaggerated properties, or to appropriate to the State larger and larger portions of the income of such properties. The war itself has shown how international regulation of the world's supplies of foods, fuels, metals, and chemicals may determine the success of one group of belligerents or the other. Under the stress of a worldwide calamity the free Governments resort to a pooling of interests and regulated free trade. Is it not possible that all the civilized nations are now prepared to recognize these tendencies as inevitable and beneficial? Such a recognition would go far to "make the world safe for democracy," even though some nations should prefer to move in this direction more slowly than other nations.

On the other hand, the free Governments manifestly tend to imitate the admirable German legislation in promotion of the public health and of the security of the laborious classes against accident, poverty, and the disabilities of old age. In other words, the free Governments are trying to combine in safe ways the advantages of autocratic paternalism with the advantages of individual freedom and large liberty of association.

These are topics on which a give-and-take method would find opportunity in an informal conference of the belligerent powers called to consider the means of securing durable international peace without further waste of blood and treasure.

It might be said that the kind of unofficial and powerless conference proposed would not reveal the state of public opinion in any of the belligerent countries on the questions propounded; but this statement would be overconfident. In the first place, each Government would reveal something of its own state of mind when it made choice of its delegates, whether these delegates were mere partisans for their own country or not. It is to be assumed that each Government would appoint as delegates publicists and business men competent to represent the public opinion of their country, and that there would be in the conference no pacifists and no mere spouters. In the next place, the distress of all the countries involved in the war is so great, and the material losses in each country are so large in proportion to its wealth, that the desire would be strong throughout the conference to arrive as promptly as possible at the bases for a just and durable settlement of the strife. It is hardly conceivable that the conversations and brief discussions among the members of such a body—provided that they were conscientious, able, and sincere men—should not result in some sound bases for common action toward peace on the part of the belligerent Governments, with or without decisive military or naval victories.

I suggested eighteen topics for consideration by the proposed conference, all relevant and of high importance; but the conference itself was to make choice among them. It could consider as few or as many of them as it thought best. The choice it made would be highly instructive for all the belligerent powers. It might show at once that it was impossible to make a durable peace now, or that it was possible. The conference would not be unwieldy in size, if each large State had only four delegates and each small State only two, as was proposed. Three and one might be still better numbers. It would, of course, make its own rules to limit debate, to prevent premature publication of its hesitations and controversies, and to secure full publicity at the proper time for all its definite action. Its main function would be, not argument of persuasion, but the expression through its recorded votes or resolutions of public opinion already formed in the several nations, and the communication of that opinion to all the nations. It is inconceivable that under the terrible circumstances a well-selected body of delegates would not try to discharge this function with as much speed as was consistent with accuracy and efficiency.

Is not such a conference in all probability the shortest way to find out how the world can secure lasting peace with safety for the smaller nations, and make sure that such a catastrophe as Prussianism brought upon the world in 1914 can never happen again? All humane people should keep steadily in mind the awfulness and detestableness of the war methods which Germany has forced the rest of the world to adopt. The allied armies are perforce fighting the Teutonic armies in the Prussian methods. Blockade and embargo make war primarily on noncombatants—men, women, and children—although later on combatants. The Entente Allies and the United States are compelled to take these inhuman measures because they seem to be the surest way—perhaps the only way—to stop this war and to discourage war hereafter; but, nevertheless, they are horrible and barbarous measures. From the point of view of humanity there is not much difference between sinking a German submarine at sight and sinking a British freighter in the same brutal way, or between "starving" the people of Germany, if possible, by blockade and embargo and "starving" the British people, if possible, by means of submarines. Every humane person must long to be relieved of the necessity of taking part in warfare of that kind.

The American Government seems to be acting on the belief that the German Government and the German people are not at one; but the public is in the dark concerning that conception. The visible evidence goes the other way. The example of France since 1870 teaches that the 70,000,000 of brave and strong people inhabiting the German Empire, who love their country and its institutions, will not stay "crushed" or "conquered." If overpowered now by blockade or invasion, or both, after desperate resistance, the Germans will remain a source of anxiety and dread for all Europe; and in all probability they will assert themselves dangerously in the future. The proposed conference might give the liberal section of the German people a chance to persuade Europe and America that the terrible revelation during the last three years of what militarism leads to has had good effect on German public opinion concerning the real securities for national progress and international peace and good-will.

Such are the reasonable hopes and expectations which prompt to the trial of an informal, unauthoritative conference on possible terms of peace before the combatants settle down to a prolonged struggle for decided military mastery.

General Tasker H. Bliss Has Behind Him a Record of Brilliant Achievements at Home and in Cuba and the Philippines

THE selection of Major Gen. Tasker H. Bliss, three months before his age retirement, as Chief of the General Staff of the Army was no mere peace-time device to compliment and reward a deserving officer by giving him a brief tenure of the highest place in the service on the eve of his leaving that service. General Bliss may or may not retire when he reaches the age limit at the end of December, but that is now irrelevant.

He was made Chief of Staff because President Wilson and Secretary of War Baker considered him the best man for the place. He would have been chosen had he been only 50 or 60 years of age instead of nearly 64. It is merely a coincidence that what would be normally his last three months of active service came at the particular stage of the army's preparation for war in which he is counted upon by the Government as the Major General best fitted to be the military head of all the forces now under arms and in the process of being organized and equipped and trained, and to be the military adviser of the President and the civilian head of the War Department.

The record of the army's development since Secretary Root of the War Department undertook the first steps of reform, in 1902 and 1903, is the best evidence in support of such an explanation of the Government's selection of General Bliss. He has been called upon to run a machine in the building of which he has had a very large part and to put into execution the big plans in the formulation and perfection of which he had had more to do than any other General now in active service.

It is not at all likely that Mr. Root was consulted in the matter, but he undoubtedly approves the choice made by Mr. Baker, for Bliss was one of his chief standbys in the days when the plan for a General Staff was being worked out, and at the time of the organization of the War College, of which General Bliss has since been President. It is the General Staff that is now carrying into effect the military scheme of this country for this war, a scheme that was formulated by the War College, so General Bliss qualifies both ways. Secretary Root said in his report of 1903, which is a War Department classic: "Especial attention is called to the thoughtful and able report of Brig. Gen. Tasker H. Bliss upon the relation of the War College to the General Staff." That was fourteen years ago. General Bliss has been working on that subject ever since. As a high army officer, not of the staff, put it, when the appointment was announced: "Bliss knows what the General Staff really means and stands for, because he helped Root make it."

That the layman may have an idea of what the General Staff means, it is worth while to describe its duties in the language of the act which created it:

> The duties of the General Staff shall be to prepare plans for the national defense and for the mobilization of the military forces in time of war; to investigate and report upon all questions affecting the efficiency of the army and its state of preparation for military operations; to render professional aid and assistance to the Secretary of War and to general officers and to other superior commanders and to act as their agents in informing and co-ordinating the action of all the different officers who are subject, under the terms of this act, to the supervision of the General Staff, and to perform such other military duties, not otherwise assigned by law, as may be, from time to time, prescribed by the President.

There, in very compact form, is what might be called the charter of the General Staff and its authority for doing all necessary things in war and in preparing for war, under the authority of the President and the Secretary.

Furthermore, as set down in the beginning, not in the law itself but in the report of Mr. Root, "a relationship of absolute confidence and personal accord and sympathy must exist between the Chief of the General Staff and the President and, necessarily, also, between the Chief of Staff and the Secretary of War. It is the duty of the Chief of Staff to ask to be relieved if such a relationship does not exist."

Major Gen. Tasker H. Bliss, New Head of the General Staff.

Such a relationship certainly does exist between Secretary Baker and General Bliss. Their offices at the War Department adjoin. The best part of the day for both of them, when they can do their best work for the Government, is when they get together late at night. The best work of the department, on any account, is that which is done in the evening, when that which seems more like work to the outsider is over and the last of the throng of visitors has said his say and departed. At night the corridors of the War Department are as quiet and peaceful as Wall Street on a Winter Sunday afternoon, which is considerably quieter than a graveyard. But there are lights burning here and there all through the big building. General McCain is there, for example, doing the vital things that an Adjutant General in war times never gets an opportunity to do by daylight.

Secretary Baker is always there until close to midnight and so is General Bliss, as he was during the earlier months of this year, as acting Chief of Staff when General Scott was absent in Russia. So it is at these late night sessions, when left by themselves in quiet, that the Secretary of War and the Chief of Staff, enjoying the relationship of "absolute confidence and personal sympathy," do the real work of perfecting the American war plans. Perhaps it should be added that neither of them cuts off from the first part of the day the time they put in at night. Their job begins at what used to be considered a reasonable breakfast hour.

Long hours have always been a hobby of General Bliss. When he was sent to Havana as a Lieutenant Colonel in 1898 to take charge of the entire customs receipts of Cuba, General Gorgas, then a Major just beginning his great work of ridding the place of yellow fever, told Bliss that he should make his working hours in the very unhealthy Custom House from 10 A. M. to 3 P. M., and no longer, if he wanted to live to complete his job. But Lieut. Col. Bliss replied that the problem of the Cuban customs, as left by the Spaniards, made it necessary for a man to work from daylight to midnight. That was the schedule he made for himself, rather than the safer one suggested by the surgeon. But he lived to finish the work which proved to be a great factor in putting poverty-stricken, graft-ridden Cuba on her feet, financially and commercially.

To know all the reasons why General Bliss is now Chief of the General Staff it is necessary to know something of his work in Cuba. One of the principal rules that govern staff appointments is that appointees must be men who have shown great capacity in administrative work. In his annual report of 1900 Secretary of War Root said: "Under the faithful and indefatigable direction of Colonel Tasker H. Bliss an efficiency in the collection of customs has been reached which is extraordinary in view of the inveterate practices formerly existing there, and under his administration lower duties are yielding larger revenues to the State."

Bliss was serving in the South on the staff of General Wilson when he got his assignment to go to Cuba and take charge of the sixteen custom districts and administer them from Havana. The receipts at the port of Havana alone were then greater than the customs collected at either Boston or Philadelphia. Upon getting his orders, Colonel Bliss asked if he might proceed to his destination by way of Washington and New York in order to see somebody who had seen the inside of a Custom House, as he never had and wanted to know what it looked like.

At the beginning he found a combination for defrauding the Government and the people that could not have been found anywhere else outside of Turkey. Out of $15,000,000 in gold received in customs each year about $6,000,000 never got beyond the pockets of the officials. They worked in combination with the importers by means of false statements, and the importers got their share of the loot as a reward. There was nothing else for an importer to do. To be honest meant his commercial ruin. Men who needed money were sent over from Spain to fill these customs places, and one year was considered enough time for each to get what he needed to retire on in Spain. Then another needy one would get his place.

The friends of Bliss, who knew all this, told him not to accept the job; that his commission, reputation, and life would be at stake. They probably were, but he took the job and cleaned out the corruption. On one occasion, as an incident of the reforming process, he had the entire force of appraisers in jail. He also abolished the century-old Government lottery of Cuba.

In the course of his administration he doubled the revenues and took in more than $100,000,000, with not a penny unaccounted for when the auditors got through with the final accounts. Incidentally, he was Secretary of the Cuban Treasury in the first intervention Government.

He drafted all the Cuban custom laws, which are in force today, and his rulings and decisions on classifications are also still in effect. Bliss was also the expert adviser of Congress and the State Department in the matter of formulating the reciprocity treaty between the United States and Cuba, and he determined all the differentials in favor of this country in return for the reductions of duties here on imports from the island. The treaty which he framed is in force now, without so much as a comma changed. Cuba has grown rich on it and the United States has not lost anything by it.

His reward for all this was his commission as a Brigadier General. It was in that rank, upon his return from Cuba, that he began his work of helping Secretary Root remake the army of the United States. Soon afterward he became President of the War College.

As all this has a distinct bearing on the reasons why he has been chosen now as Chief of Staff, it is worth while to digress and go back to the three-year period between 1885 and 1888. He was then in the Naval War College at Newport, as professor of the art of war, and working with Admiral Mahan of the navy in developing comprehensive plans

Long, Weary Waiting for Airplane Student

An Aspirant Tells How It Feels to be Kept Down in the "Ground School" Until One Is Prepared to Fly

IN all that has been said and sung during the last few months of the part the United States is going to play in aviation in the present war, one important element has been overlooked—the aviator. So much has been heard of appropriations, organization, new types of machines, Liberty motors, that the mere mention of the air service conjures up visions of clouds of the best, newest, fastest machines in the world swarming over the front in France to deal summary destruction to the Huns. Much of this is on the way, and it will all come in time, we hope. But meanwhile the man at the wheel (or joy stick) is forgotten. Or, rather, shall we say, taken for granted?

It is a tedious business, being taken for granted. Suppose, for example, that you are a well-educated young man of between 19 and 36. You have just completed eight weeks of hard work at your ground school and have graduated creditably. Your mind is a teeming and untapped storehouse of information on such matters as angles of incidence, rotating armatures, Morse code, army paper work, tachometers and fulminates, all of which you are fairly aching to put to use. Then you are calmly informed by authority that the American flying schools are all full up for weeks to come, but that you may, if you wish, volunteer for training in France, or perhaps Italy. You jump at the chance, though impatient at the delay the voyage will cause; but the ocean has to be crossed some time, anyway. And then suppose that instead of being packed off immediately on a transport, as you had anticipated, you are assigned to barracks at some depot, Mineola, let us say, and simply wait there for two, four, Lord knows how many weeks, knowing nothing, doing almost nothing, gradually losing all belief that you are ever going to know or do anything.

Meanwhile, the American public takes you for granted, or, if it ever thinks of you at all, assumes that you are already more at home in the air than on the ground. It really isn't particularly pleasant.

At first it seemed rather a distinction to be assigned to Mineola. The very name has a fascination for the aviator, especially the embryonic aviator; it has something of the effect that the name of Mecca has on the Moslem. The first sight of the high board inclosure of the flying field brings a distinct thrill. But after sitting in barracks day after day, fingering brand-new equipment, cleaning brand-new pistols, hearing the airplanes of the fortunate buzz by overhead, ever and again sneezing in the plentiful dust—that yellow Long Island dust which rises so thickly when the ground is scratched that even the General's car must slow down on the high road—well, the thrill wears off. Even Mecca has its dull streets.

Not that there is any discomfort about it. The barracks are almost palatial, as temporary barracks go, comparing favorably with those at the officers' training camps. The mess is good and leave is easy to obtain. Too easy, indeed; it is the eternal idleness that is hardest to bear. For beyond an hour or two of drill every day and an occasional turn at kitchen or mess police there is, for the most part, little to do but smoke cigarettes and try to forget the present in the future.

The day begins early, as days in the army always do. Soon after 4:30 early flying starts out on the field, and from then on till noon machines are always to be seen and heard in the air. After the aviator-to-be has washed, dressed, and breakfasted there is little to do but sit and watch them, grudgingly, enviously. For few if any of the men waiting here have ever flown; only a few exceptionally lucky ones have even been "up" at all. The great majority have been no nearer flying than standing on tiptoe and squinting into the pilot's cabin, back in the rigging course at ground school. All of which, of course, makes it even harder to sit here idly while the fortunate ones from the flying school down the street, men, perhaps, whom the idle ones knew well at ground school, clatter by on their first solos.

"He's banking too much," remarks one Candidate Jones, after a critical squint.

"Gosh," rejoins his neighbor, "I'd be willing to bank all over the sky if I could get one chance."

Candidate Jones, sighing assent, strolls back into his barrack and sets about policing his bunk, which for the most part consists of picking up all the burned matches and cigarette butts in his immediate neighborhood and depositing them neatly under Candidate Smith's bunk near by. After that is done he goes over to detachment headquarters for mail. He finds none, most likely, for his friends have quit writing, thinking he has sailed long since. On the way back he stops at the bulletin board to comfort himself with a twentieth reading of the announcement. "After sailing, the address of members of this detachment will be ——" (Deleted by censor—something wonderfully vague and important and foreign sounding.) The War Department occasionally exhibits an unexpected love of the picturesque. But those words, "after sailing." Ha! Picturesqueness is all right, but humor is out of place in an official notice. Candidate Jones returns to his bunk and lights another cigarette.

Listlessly, he picks up some of the literature recently distributed, "French Verbs at a Glance," perhaps, or "Easy Italian." French he is already slightly familiar with, but Italian rather fatigues him. How do they pronounce the stuff, anyway? He settles himself on his back and goes through the pronouncing key; forgets it all and impatiently turns to the first lesson. "Il padre," the father. That sound reasonable. "La madre," good again. The present tense of the verb "to have" is less tangible. Candidate Jones feels his pistol sticking into him; he shifts his position and loses his place. Oh, yes, there it is; io ho, tu hai, egli ha.

The men who have volunteered for training in Italy are in a curious state of mind. They have no idea of where they are going or of what is going to happen to them when they get there; but they are perfectly sure that it will be the best possible. No one has been sent to Italy for flying training yet, or at least no one has been there long enough to send back word what it is like, and these men will be the first in that particular field, pioneers, explorers. And that is enough.

"We're going to get the very best that's coming to any one." That is how Candidate Jones puts it, and it expresses the attitude of all. To be the first, to get the best of everything, that is what they are looking forward to. That is why Italy is a more desirable place to get flying training than Mineola, or even France — if one ever gets there.

A cloud of dust sweeps lazily in from the camp street, accompanied by a wave of unintelligible chatter from a gang of laborers who are laying a water pipe. It is high noon; the sun beats straight down on the innumerable tent tops of Camp Mills, looking remote and Biblical in the haze, and heat waves dance over the purple stretches of the flying field. All at once a sharp exclamation pierces the quiet.

"Say, there's the Major up there, looping the loop! Wow, look at him!"

Fired both by interest and loyalty, Candidate Jones jumps to his feet and runs out. He squints upward into the blue depths, where the undersized gnat that is the Major plunges about in an orgy of loops and dives and spirals. When he is tired of that he proceeds to go into all the positions, one after another, which Candidate Jones's eight weeks' instruction has warned him to avoid—stalling, skidding, side slipping, till at last he glides down in a great spiral, landing at last over toward Hempstead so perfectly that no one can tell at what moment his machine touches the ground.

The group that has gathered outside the barrack door breaks up.

"Well, we'll all be able to do that some day," remarks some one, slinging a towel over his shoulder and departing washward. And immediately the thought rises in every breast, "Will we, though? Will I, in particular?"

For that is the chief bugbear of this time of idleness and ignorance—wondering whether, after all, one is going to make good. What if, after all this preparation, the eight weeks of ground school, the voyage, the flying instruction, taking so much time and costing so much money, a man should discover at last that he was "yellow" or too stupid to make a good flier? Is it possible that those gorgeous day dreams of Alps and blue sky and victory will never be realized, even in a measure? It is a terrible prospect, the mere thought of which sends a cold chill down Candidate Jones's back. The need of doing something immediately overpowers him; he glances down, discovers that his leggins want polishing; strips them off, runs for some soap, and scrubs for dear life until mess time.

Americans Must Realize That Present-Day Germany Is Wholly Prussianized, Says Secretary of Agriculture Houston

By David Franklin Houston,
Secretary of Agriculture and Member of the Council of National Defense.

WHAT is this Prussian military autocracy against which is arrayed four-fifths of the world? How has such an influence persisted in a nation which many have regarded as foremost in science, in sociology, and, in some respects, in community living? Does it really exist? Many Americans find difficulty in believing that there is such a force today in Germany.

This is natural. Until recently they have for the most part thought almost exclusively in terms of German art, education, science, including medicine and industry. For many generations Americans went to school in Germany. German university training was considered almost a prerequisite for academic advancement. German industry was known to be making giant strides. Germany was assumed to stand for the maximum of efficiency in everything. It was the home of science, the final expression of modernism.

In respect to all these things the world's impressions contained a large amount of error. Germany has never been supreme in science. In discovery, in creative science, and in invention she has lagged behind England and France and has been inferior to this country. Her peculiar merit has been that she has made a system of science, organized it back of industry, and especially back of those industries which are fundamental to military pursuits, and has applied it intelligently and persistently.

Especially in applied chemistry has her achievement been marked. In industry her chief performance has been to organize it through every possible form of State aid or support. Prussia, in particular, has been highly organized at the top. She is really a great public corporation for military and industrial purposes. She is a feudal estate writ large and, as such, well administered. She has been overorganized and organized on an unsound basis; and there is truth in the assertion that much of her dissatisfaction with pre-war conditions was due to the unwholesomeness of her economic situation. In a measure she was trying to lift herself by her bootstraps. She was strong at the top and weak at the bottom. Taking it by and large, Prussia is not and never has been as efficient as the United States or Great Britain. These have been insufficiently organized at the top, but they have been immensely strong in their foundations; and what organization they have had has been in the main for peace and not for war.

Americans, even those who travel and read much, have not concerned themselves deeply about foreign political institutions. They have taken note of what lay on the surface and have not always carefully examined it. They have observed that German cities are orderly and clean, that Germany is a confederation and that suffrage for the Reichstag is universal. It was not unnatural for them hastily to assume that German institutions were modern, as her science was, and that they were therefore democratic. It is not uncommon for people to be deceived by names and appearances, especially in politics.

To understand Germany politically we must examine her history and fix our attention on Prussia. There are two Germanies today—modern Germany, Germany of the masses, kindly, orderly, and industrious; political Germany, governmental Germany, mediaeval, absolutist, militarist, aggressive. The latter is passing; the former is the Germany of tomorrow.

About the time of the discovery of America the Hohenzollern family ruled over an insignificant tract surrounding the village of Berlin. In 1611 its power was extended by the union of the Mark of Brandenburg and the Duchy of Prussia. In 1640 a strong character, Frederick William, came into power. He exercised a despotic rule, but put his house in order and developed a relatively strong standing army with which to make further headway by force as opportunity might offer.

In 1688, the date of the Restoration in England and the beginning of her orderly constitutional government, Frederick III., an ambitious individual, became head of the house. His title was Elector of Brandenburg and Duke of Prussia. He was anxious for recognition, for the title of King. The War of Spanish Succession was about to begin.

David Franklin Houston.

His overlord, the Holy Roman Emperor, needed assistance. Frederick was prepared to trade, and promised the aid of his army in exchange for the title of Elector of Brandenburg and King of Prussia. This he got in 1701. Here was the first phase of the contact with Austria, the last of which is seen in our own day in the complete subordination of Austria to Prussian influence.

A violent, brutish person, Frederick William I., began to reign in 1713. Like his ancestors, he kept his eye on the main chance, husbanded his resources, and added to his army, which at his death numbered 80,000, an immense trained force for that day and time. He, too, was ready by force to add to his patrimony at the expense of any convenient neighbor. It was left to his successor to make use of what he had prepared. In 1740 the Emperor of Austria, Charles VI., the last of the male line of Hapsburgs, died. He had found the leading powers by solemn pledge to recognize as his successor his daughter, Maria Theresa.

Frederick the Great promptly gave Maria Theresa strong assurance of friendship and support, having it in mind at the very time to commit a crime against her. He suddenly moved his army against her province of Silesia and, after eight years of desperate warfare, appropriated it. He at least made no pretense of virtue and is reported to have said: "Ambition, interest, and the desire of making people talk about me carried the day and I decided for war."

Prussia was defeated and humiliated by Napoleon in a quick campaign in 1806, but the liberal movements of the period scarcely affected her. She bided her time and laid her plans. Her next considerable advance was made in 1864, when she induced Austria to join her in taking Schleswig and Holstein from Denmark. Austria received Holstein; and in 1866 Prussia picked a quarrel with her and quickly vanquished her, appropriating Holstein and annexing Hanover, Hesse, Nassau, and Frankfort, which had taken sides with Austria. Thus she rounded out her territory.

When the Prussian Parliament protested that force was not a sufficient justification for what had been done to Denmark, Bismarck replied: "Our right is the right of the German Nation to exist, to breathe, to unite." The claim of a place in the sun, the doctrine of necessity, and the right of might are not of recent appearance in Prussian history. They have been the outstanding characteristics of her thinking and practice since she emerged from mediaeval obscurity.

The next step was the crushing of France in 1870-71, the annexation of Alsace-Lorraine and the imposition of Prussian leadership on Germany under the guise of a confederation. No wonder Bernhardi wrote: "The lessons of history confirm the view that wars which have been deliberately provoked by far-seeing statesmen have had the happiest results." No wonder Prussia believes that a great army is the cornerstone of her well-being as a nation and that war is a positive good if it succeeds.

So Prussia has come to dominate Germany. She now seeks to dominate the whole of Central Europe and a part of Asia; and, if she gains what she wants in this war, she will persistently lay her plans for the next great aggressive move.

Prussia is Germany. She has three-fifths the area and five-eighths the population. The German Empire is a federation only in name. Bismarck's aim was to make Prussia supreme in Germany and Germany supreme in Europe. He knew how to do the job. This is the underlying fact: Prussia is Germany and Prussia politically is feudal. In such a system sovereignty is the private right of rulers. The Prince may deal with his people as private individuals do with their lands. Recently we had a clear, practical illustration of this in Germany. The ruler of Waldeck got into debt. He could not raise the money to equip his army. He therefore sold his rights, his possessions, and his people to the King of Prussia and went to Italy to live on his income.

The people exist for the Government and not the Government for the people. Frederick William was not joking when he wrote, "Salvation belongs to the Lord and everything else is my affair," or again, "We are Lord and King and can do what we will." Neither was the present Kaiser in a jocular mood when he asserted: "We Hohenzollerns take our crown from God alone and to God alone are we responsible in the fulfillment of our duty." He was simply revealing the true inwardness of his royal mediaeval mind and of Prussian politics, speaking from the background of centuries of feudal traditions. Prussia is a feudal State. It practices paternalism on a large scale in this modern day as did the Duchy of Prussia on a small scale centuries ago. It asserts the divine right of the King and of aristocrats to rule.

Prussian Governmental arrangements today of all grades are the legal expression of the economic interests and domination of the large landowners and of their recent allies the great industrial leaders. Feudal estates still persist in the kingdom, with their principal strongholds in East Prussia, Posen, and Pomerania. In Prussia 31 per cent. of the land is in estates of over 250 acres, large holdings for Central and Western Europe; in Posen 55 per cent., and in Pomerania 52 per cent. The average size of 8,365 estates in East Prussia is 1,132 acres; of 2,793 in Pomerania, 1,380 acres.

Many of these are very large and are owned by descendants of feudal lords. The great landholder, the junker, is an individualist, independent, militaristic, conservative, in favor of armed strength, condescending to inferiors, with a feeling for power, and with the instincts of a soldier, a supporter of monarchy as long as monarchy has a strong arm and supports him and his interests. At first the junker fought the new industrial class, but a reconciliation was effected, and recently the powerful leaders of the two classes have co-operated.

The caste system prevails everywhere. Society is stratified and the individual in each stratum is trained for his duties in his particular sphere. Education and society, as well as the army, are organized on this basis; and there is no small truth in the witticism that "every Prussian is satisfied because he has somebody below him to kick." Royalty, the junkers, and the great industrial leaders run Prussia, and Prussia runs Germany.

"But," it may be asked, "how can this be? The Reichstag is the popular house of the Imperial Parliament, and its members are elected by universal by which land and sea forces might cooperate in warfare. Supplementing this work at Newport, he had a long tour abroad, during which he took up the study of French, German, and English military systems. Still later he was Military Attaché at our legation in Madrid at the outbreak of the Spanish war.

The Newport studies had their logical sequel several years later, when General Bliss was made a member of the Joint Board of the Army and Navy.

There have been various other factors in the making of this Major General who is now looked upon by the President as the army's most finished product for the place of Chief of the General Staff, factors which have not been touched upon in this unchronological summary of forty-two years of active service. He was the honor man of his time in the Artillery School. He commanded a division on the Mexican border in time of trouble. He has managed big manoeuvres of the American troops, the "red" armies and the "blue" armies, &c., since the first of them in 1893. It is true that they were not very big armies, as measured by present European standards, but no American General has commanded any that were bigger. He has had his turn at command in the Philippines, and his administration of the islands was characterized not only by the putting down of insurrections but by the development of a system of law and government reforms which have proved effective and lasting. He devised new taxation laws and demonstrated that courts could be made to do the work of guns in many instances.

SOME OF THE MEN WHO AID GEN. BLISS ON THE GENERAL STAFF.

In the course of one of his tours of duty in Washington, General Bliss, then a young officer, struck up a friendship with a Russian in the Treasury Department who convinced him that the Russian language was worth learning. He already knew Spanish, French, and German. He added Russian. Some time after that Colonel Roger Birney, the father of the built-up gun, showed him a manuscript in Russian on the science of artillery and said he would give a good deal for a translation. Bliss translated it, and it was so valuable that the War Department published it for use in the Artillery School. After that he translated various other Russian books for the use of the army.

"I never get tired of the job," General Bliss once said to a curious fellow-officer who asked him why he did not take more leave. The records of the Adjutant General's Office show that, since his graduation from West Point in 1875, General Bliss has taken leaves of absence aggregating, all told, for the forty-two years, three months and twelve days. For the same period of forty-two years he has had about twenty days off for sickness. If he had taken all the time that he was entitled to he would have had four years off, with full pay.

His longest absence from the service was a month, when he came east from his station on the Pacific Coast to get married.

When he got his appointment to West Point he was a boy of 17, living in Lewisburg, Penn. His father, a clergyman, told him that he should go and thank Congressman Packer, the man who had got his appointment for him, who was fourteen miles away in Sunbury. The boy walked all the way there and back, twenty-eight miles, on a hot day in August, carrying his shoes in his hands.

Precedents for Expulsion of Senators

Some Cases During Civil War Days Recalled by Present Demand for Ousting of La Follette and Other Obstructionists

DEMANDS from various organizations and individuals in different parts of the country for the expulsion of Senator La Follette and other members of Congress for their anti-war activities have not aroused more than an academic interest in Washington as yet, but many members have been putting in spare moments in hunting through the records for expulsion cases of the past.

The two comparatively recent cases, those of Burton of Kansas and Lorimer of Illinois, having had nothing to do with war, do not apply to the present agitation. Burton, who was accused of appearing as a lawyer before Government departments in the interest of outside clients, was not expelled but was allowed to resign. Neither was Lorimer expelled in a technical sense. He was excluded on the ground that his election had not been valid and that he had not been really a member. This conclusion was not reached, however, until long after he had taken a seat in the Senate.

It is in the records of the second session of the Thirty-seventh Congress that the search for expulsion cases is most fruitful. That was the session of the civil war Congress beginning on Dec. 2, 1861, the session corresponding, in relative time, to the session of the present war Congress that will begin on the first Monday of next December.

In the Winter of 1861-2 resolutions were introduced for the expulsion of seven Senators and two members of the House. The House got to the work first. On the opening day of the session it expelled Representative John W. Reid of Missouri, who had taken up arms against the Union. Two days later Representative Henry C. Burnett of Kentucky was expelled for being "in open rebellion" and presiding over meetings in his State that were in sympathy with the South.

Of the seven Senators under fire at that session three were expelled by unanimous vote, one by a vote of 32 to 14—a very slim margin over the required two-thirds—one was allowed to resign, and, in the case of the other two, the votes in favor of expulsion were too small.

Senator James F. Simmons of Rhode Island was the member who was allowed to resign. There was nothing in his case which fits any phase of the situation today. He was accused of inducing the War Department to purchase 50,000 breechloading rifles and of receiving $10,000 from the makers of the rifles for his services.

Senators John C. Breckinridge of Kentucky and Waldo P. Johnson of Missouri were expelled very early in the session, and with practically no debate, because they were in the Confederate Army.

In the case of Senator Trusten Polk of Missouri, who was expelled by unanimous vote on Jan. 10, 1862, the present-day precedent-hunters find something more nearly approaching conditions now prevailing. Polk worked against the war and the Union by means of propaganda and by aiding secession newspapers.

Senator Charles Sumner of Massachusetts, who voted yes on every expulsion case that came up and who was the most persistent member in denouncing those accused of disloyalty, introduced the anti-Polk resolution on Dec. 18, 1861. It was as follows:

"Resolved, That Trusten Polk of Missouri, now a traitor to the United States, be expelled, and he hereby is expelled from the Senate."

The chief evidence in support of the charge that Polk was a traitor was a letter written by him and exposed by THE NEW YORK TIMES on Dec. 12. The letter, which was sent just before the battle of Wilson's Creek to P. S. Wilkes of Springfield, Mo., was read to the Senate by Mr. Sumner. It was as follows:

"I send my check to you for The Equal Rights Gazette. It is all I can do, and I could not do even that much until now. You have heard of the difficulty that The Bulletin has fallen into. I have had to ante up there at the rate of $200. I hope the friends there have made arrangements that will assure the permanency of the paper. It has been, and is, doing good service. I have made a speech (yesterday) on the state of affairs, Southern rights, and the position of Missouri, present and future, which I will send you as soon as published in pamphlet for distribution. In the meantime I will send it in slips, and if The Gazette can stand the draft on its columns, and you approve of it and think it will do good in forming correct public sentiments in Southwest Missouri, please have it published. Dissolution is now a fact, not only a fact accomplished, but thrice repeated. Everything here looks like inevitable and final dissolution. Will Missouri hesitate a moment to go with her Southern sisters? I hope not. Please let me hear from you."

Three weeks after the introduction of the Polk resolution by Senator Sumner it came back from the Judiciary Committee with recommendation of passage. It was passed on Jan. 10, 1862.

The next month Senator Morton S. Wilkinson of Minnesota introduced a resolution for the expulsion of Senator Lazarus W. Powell of Kentucky. Powell had fought in vain against the expulsion of his colleague, Breckinridge, earlier in the session, but when his own turn came to fight to retain his seat his most bitter opponent was his new colleague, Senator Garrett Davis of Kentucky, a strong Union man, who had been elected by the Kentucky Legislature to succeed Breckinridge.

The resolution against Powell was based on the charge that in June of 1861, after eleven States had voted to secede from the Union, he had presided at a big meeting of sympathizers with the Confederacy at Henderson, Ky. This meeting adopted resolutions denouncing President Lincoln and demanding the removal of Federal troops from the South. Unlike Breckinridge, who was in camp with his Confederate command when he was expelled, Powell stayed in Washington and fought against his removal.

The Judiciary Committee recommended that the Powell resolution should not be passed, but Davis insisted on it, and the fight was made in open session. Powell merely claimed that he had done nothing disloyal, and the Senate voted to uphold the Judiciary Committee by 28 to 11.

On May 7, 1862, Senator Sumner introduced this resolution:

"Resolved, That Benjamin Stark, a Senator from Oregon, who has been found by a committee of this body to be disloyal to the Government of the United States, be, and the same is hereby, expelled from the Senate."

In support of his resolution the Massachusetts Senator read the findings of the committee concerning Stark, who, in spite of his residence on the Pacific Coast, was an ardent sympathizer with the South.

But the eloquence of Sumner did not prevail. The vote to expel Stark was 16, and the vote not to expel him was 21.

By all odds the most curious case was that of Senator Jesse D. Bright of Indiana, who was expelled by a vote of 32 to 14, on Feb. 5, 1862, after a long fight.

Bright sent a personal letter to Jefferson Davis, President of the Confederacy, introducing a friend who wanted to sell firearms. This was on March 1, 1861. Senator Bright tried to justify this remarkable act by explaining that the letter was written before the attack on Fort Sumter and that he did not think at the time of writing it that there was going to be war. He did not seem to attach any particular significance to the fact that his friend had wanted to sell guns to the Confederate Government, but declared that his letter to Jefferson Davis was nothing more than he would have written to anybody at any time anywhere to help a friend.

The Judiciary Committee recommended that the resolution for Bright's expulsion should not be passed, but in this case the committee was overruled by the Senate.

Intimate Glimpses of Augustin Daly

Actors and Actresses of Yesterday, and Some Still on Stage, Figure in First Biography of Celebrated Theatrical Manager

It is the unusual toward which our interest turns in the life of a public man when his biography is published. Since Augustin Daly's death in June, 1899, his managerial career at Daly's Theatre has been lauded and treasured by those who used to attend his Shakespearean revivals as devotees to a shrine. His memory has been kept green in various writings by the late William Winter, and once we were given a girlish glimpse behind the scenes into Daly's sanctum in the "Diary of a Daly Débutante." But we had to wait nearly nineteen years for the late Judge Daly to finish his task of collecting his brother's papers and culling therefrom what would fitly measure his activity in the theatre.

In Judge Daly's biography of his brother, to be issued by the Macmillan Company, we are given a new and altogether entertaining glimpse of the New York manager.

The new biography, first of all, shows him to have been a man of deep sentiment; he treasured scenes of his childhood to the very end. He was in Norfolk, Va., in March, 1896, and forwarded this to his brother:

I have been spending all my spare time in rambles over our earliest ways and byways. I have located Scott's school, but I cannot find the haunted house near the Old Fields, in which our first circus was opened in the old cow shed. * * * The old theatre in which we saw our first play is razed to the ground, but the open space filled with broken bricks and huge splinters shows the spot.

No trouble was too great for this brother; no gift too royal. Christmas of 1897 brought this letter from Augustin:

When I was in Auld Scotia this year I got the Scott fever very bad. It took later the form of "uncut and original boards" (because I got some bargains that way), but I had nearly recovered from the mildest form (the form in which I turn it over to you) of first editions bound; and, as you will see on examining into your "case," it was a nearly complete cure. Only one set is missing, which I am promised, and will send you when it comes. With my heart's best wishes for a merry Christmas and a happy New Year.

That the present was regal may be grasped when one knows that the novel, "Waverley," alone, in its first edition, cost Daly the princely sum of £165.

This sentiment was behind the iron will of the manager—a will which always asserted itself from the very earliest days. There are many humorous instances of its exercise, in anecdote and letter. During Daly's first season at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, he started that régime which led to a well-rounded stock company. A veteran actor in his company came to him. "My line—," he began. But Mr. Daly interrupted gently: "There is no line in this theatre; you do everything."

On another occasion, one of his stage assistants came to the rising manager. "I tell you my policy, Mr. Daly," he said. "When I am on the stage, I permit no one to interfere with me." "Just my policy, Harkins," Daly replied, smiling. "When I am on the stage I permit no one to interfere with me."

In July, 1879, when Catherine Lewis accepted Daly's offer of an engagement, she referred to herself as the prima donna, but was quickly reprimanded. "Leave out the prima donna phraseology," he hastened to assure her, "substitute 'for chief singing business' or anything else of that kind."

It was before Augustin Daly that Richard Mansfield met his Waterloo, where will is concerned. During 1892 Mansfield had a long correspondence with the manager, full of his unswerving belief in himself. From California he wrote: "I am exceedingly ambitious and I confess it—I desire to produce great plays and to play them greatly, and with God's aid I shall accomplish this." To which Daly made prompt reply: "I do not want to submerge your individuality or personality or fame in any way—but at the same time I cannot afford to be less than Commander in Chief of all my forces from the highest officer under me to the humblest. Only in this way can I lead you on to victory—the victory which we both would desire." The result of these negotiations was the production of Hatten's dramatization of "The Scarlet Letter" on Sept. 12, 1892.

Augustin Daly.

The iron will of the manager did not prevent his company from loving him, even though at times they feared him. When the moment came for some of them to slip from his ranks into the companies of Wallack and Palmer they usually felt like renegades, and often asked to be taken back.

They all came back—Mrs. Gilbert, James Lewis, George Clarke—very much in the spirit of the latter, who wrote, in October, 1886:

After these many years of ventures and roamings and idle dreamings I want to go home—and your theatre was to me the happiest home I ever had.

In this biography Judge Daly has succeeded admirably in selecting just that material which will show the present generation of theatregoers how seriously the actors of the past took their profession. They were all champions of the theatre, measuring their work by the highest standards.

When, in 1875, Edwin Booth and Daly were discussing the probability of an engagement, the former measured his different rôles according to their strain upon him, and he enumerated as being "light" the rôles of Shylock, Iago, Wolsey, Brutus, Cassius, Antony, and Don Caesar. The standard has changed since that time.

Naturally, a reader of the life of Augustin Daly would hasten to trace the rise of players best known to the younger generation of theatregoers. The first mention of John Drew was a letter from his mother which the young man brought to New York from Philadelphia, intent on having a good time. It runs:

Arch Street Theatre,
Philadelphia,
May 28, 1873.

My dear Sir: If not inconsistent with your resolutions, will you oblige me by giving my son (the bearer of this) two seats for each of your theatres?

Yours truly,
LOUISA DREW.

It was two years after this, in "The Big Bonanza," that Drew made his first appearance under the New York manager. Were he asked he would probably recall the perturbations of mind that seized him when, in 1879, he wrote to Daly regarding salary

"In accordance with your desire," runs the halting missive, "that I should state my terms, may I hope that forty dollars ($40) per week will not seem an 'iniquitous demand.' I have, I feel, improved in one point at least since our former connection, and that it is in my manner of speaking, which, as you are aware, frequently rendered what I had to say in a degree unintelligible by reason of bad enunciation and rapidity. This, I think, I have reformed altogether by almost an entire season in a semi-serious part which demanded slowness and distinct utterance. * * * Yours very sincerely, JOHN DREW."

The manager's reply is not given, but Drew's next letter tells the tale.

I beg to say that I will accept your offer of thirty or thirty-five dollars per week for next season. Hoping sincerely that it may be in your power—as I am sure it is your intention—to make it the latter, I remain, very sincerely, JOHN DREW.

The first time Daly saw Ada Rehan was while she was playing in Daly's "Pique," (not under his management,) with Miss Davenport starring. She was engaged for his company at the same time with John Drew, and her correspondence regarding finances met with the same result—$35 a week—although she assured the manager in one of her letters: "I have several advantageous offers, and two, I give you my word of honor, are for $50."

Daly's first glimpse of the acting of Irving was in Liverpool, in 1878. He had a back seat in the first balcony, and the play was "Louis XI." He records:

I fear the great I did not impress me with his treatment of it. In his frenzy for it appears to be a frenzy with him to be realistic or NATURAL—he descends to the tragedian's tricks. The peculiarity of his voice, which we have heard so often referred to consists of sudden and unexpected and sometimes absurd rises and falls.

Who has not come under the inspiration of Augustin Daly among the more recent well-known actors of our time? Otis Skinner can add to the reminiscences of those days; so can Charles Richman, William Collier, May Robson, Cecilia Loftus, Kitty Cheatham, and countless others. All these figure in the new biography, which is a contribution to the history of the theatre at the same time that it throws new personal light on the figure of the man himself. Not much has been said in the book of his family life, which probably was always clouded by the loss of his two sons, who died of diphtheria within a few days of each other.

The manager had a superabundance of imagination; he was always looking for striking material, and when in London used to haunt the slums, the courts, and Scotland Yard; his liking for melodrama was as strong as that of Dion Boucicault, the arch-melodramatic dramatist of that day. And he drew around him the most interesting figures of the time. Oakey Hall, former District Attorney and Mayor of New York City, was one of these. As a manager he was always courteous in his aid of others. He was ever ready to aid the actor in distress, and his subordinates likewise, who remained with him year in and year out.

His theatres he loved as personalities; for one, the Fifth Avenue, he had Oliver Wendell Holmes pen an address for the opening; on another occasion, for the opening of the season of 1892, he tried to procure the services of Eugene Field for a poetic address. Here his sentiment came in again. He possessed very much the same ambitions as a manager that Henry Irving had, and, fortunately, he had a sense of humor, which took no offense when others joked him about his revivals. When every one was groaning over the preparations for "Love's Labour's Lost" there came to him this missive from Oakey Hall, the former Mayor:

Dear A

I read myself stupid over L. L. Lost. Read it in 3 articuals, by aid of illustrations & notes, etc. A series of fine poetical readings, but won't you dress it up and write in some plot and fun and introduce three or four Characterrs! Adapt Shake, by all means & provide beds in the boxes.

Yours
O. K.

This is Sarkasm

But that it was not entirely sarcasm to Daly is seen by a note sent many years leter to his brother:

Come down here and spend about 7 hours at a rehearsal trying to squeeze juice out of a stone. * * * It's a dreadful job—worse than ever—tougher than before.

To the younger generation the Daly days will mean little, but there is a large host of theatregoers possessing Daly memories who will welcome this record of one brother by another.

Did Bismarck Unconsciously Save Democracy?

His Policy Prevented Alliance of the Three Great Autocracies and Fostered Russian Friendship for France and Great Britain

DID Bismarck save the world for democracy?

How Bismarck himself would receive this astonishing query can only be guessed at, with the proper breathlessness. It is only fair to that builder of imperial Germany to set forth in good round terms that nothing could have been further from his mind. But from a study of mid-European politics in the last half century that conclusion does emerge.

It was Bismarck who refused to attempt the resuscitation of that famous pact of autocracy, the League of the Three Emperors. It was Bismarck who rejected the overtures that would have joined Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Russia as imperial allies. It was Bismarck who insisted upon joining with Austria-Hungary in a formal alliance that was definitely directed against Russia.

Bismarck admitted young Italy to imperial friendship, instead of Russia; drove Russia to seek aid and comfort in the arms of western democracy; split the forces of European autocracy, that might well have proved an invincible force to the rest of the world; saved, thus, democracy for modern civilization.

For a Germany, not surrounded by an "iron ring" of foes, but flinging her power far to the east and on into Asia, dominating Russia as she dominates the empire to the south, would be a force through which militarism and autocracy might well hope to conquer the world. And Russia, trained by German efficiency, munitioned by German watchfulness, its rulers held to no alliance with the democracy of France and England, its people too ably governed to revolt, would be an ally on which Germany might stake much. The huge man-power of the three empires, directed and dominated by thoroughgoing German "system," could offer one cannot guess how much of offensive strength against a democratic world. The three great autocracies welded into one might well have proved not only unconquerable in defense, but irresistible when the decision came to wage war on the rest of the world. That no such combination exists, the world, perhaps, owes to Bismarck.

Professor Archibald Cary Coolidge of Harvard does not state these speculative conclusions in his study of "The Origins of the Triple Alliance," (Charles Scribner's Sons,) but he implies them unescapably in his recording of the historical facts. It may be that an alliance of Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Russia could not have lasted—Bismarck obviously did not think it could. It may be that even if it had, the democratic world could have stood against it just the same. But the picture of three autocracies, comprising all of Central and Eastern Europe, organized and led by Germany, is a picture of something that looks, certainly, unconquerable. But for Bismarck's action this alliance might have been. It was not the German Emperor who turned his back on Russia. It was Bismarck alone. And he deceived and disobeyed his imperial master to do it.

Russia certainly sought an alliance with Germany. We are left, on reading the history of the time, with a queer impression of the two old empires of Russia and Austria, ostensibly still joined as allies in the "Dreikaiserbund," each seeking to circumvent the other in obtaining the friendship of the new empire that was far the strongest of them all. Russia wanted an alliance with Germany. And, what is more, the German Emperor wanted it. He wanted it very positively. His heart was set upon it. He did not get it, autocrat though he was, because his Chancellor's heart was set the other way. And when Bismarck wanted a thing, he calmly and immovably got it. The Emperor did not want an alliance with Austria. When he finally consented to it he agreed only on the specific provision that it should not be directed against Russia. To the last moment he pleaded—why not admit Russia to the pact and revive the League of the Three Emperors? Bismarck quietly went ahead and drew up the terms of an alliance between Germany and Austria-Hungary that was directed against Russia, and, in spite of the enmity between Germany and France, against Russia alone.

The outstanding steps in the conversion of the League of the Three Emperors—itself the successor to the somewhat mystical but none the less practically influential Holy Alliance—into an Austro-German alliance against Russia are three: Bismarck's refusal to promise impartiality in the quarrel that arose between Russia and Austria-Hungary over the Eastern question; his rejection of his master's plea to admit Russia to the new Austro-German alliance, and the final agreement of the two Central Empires in a defensive pact in which Russia was recognized as the object against which defense was directed.

Bismarck in 1870.

In 1876 trouble between Russia and Austria over the Balkan situation became acute. Professor Coolidge writes:

> The game of political and diplomatic intrigue was at this moment particularly intricate. The League of the Three Emperors still existed, and the relations between the members were in theory close and cordial, but not one of the partners had complete trust in the others. Circumstances beyond their control seemed to be pushing them toward an estrangement, if not worse. Bismarck, Gortschakoff, and Andrassy were all diplomats of more than ordinary skill, and each was now trying to feel his way with the others. Bismarck, the ablest of the three, was also in much the strongest position, for, besides representing the most powerful empire, he had the fewest difficulties at home to contend with, and he had no immediate ambitions to serve or vital interests at stake. * * *

There was no war between Russia and Austria, but between Russia and Turkey there was. The defeat of the Ottoman Empire the next year precipitated the Congress of Berlin, which Professor Coolidge describes as "a gathering of very distinguished and able men, Beaconsfield, Gortschakoff, Salisbury, and various minor lights, presided over with masterful vigor and tact by Prince Bismarck, then at the full height of his genius and fame." Of the result of that congress he writes:

> The Turks were not the only people dissatisfied with the results of the congress. The anger of the Russians was still hotter. They had fought what they believed was the fight of Europe and of humanity; they had shed their blood and spent their treasure without stint, and in the hour of victory their hand had been stayed, the other nations had combined against them, their fair compensation had been cut down, while their jealous rivals, Austria and England, had helped themselves to whatever Turkish lands were to their liking. At Berlin Russia had found herself without a friend. Even Germany, the ally who owed so much to her, had adopted an attitude of lofty neutrality, which was only a mask for her support of Austria. * * *

For Bismarck had now indeed crossed the Rubicon, in this matter of friendship with Russia. That empire, slighted, was angry now. He had decided upon an alliance with Austria. And he realized fully that he would have his Emperor to deal with if he left Russia out. Emperor William was fond of his nephew and desired his friendship. He felt honest gratitude for Russia's attitude of friendliness in 1871. He knew that a formal alliance with Austria, from which Russia was excluded, would menace any pleasantness in Russo-German relations. His anger with his nephew would pass, Bismarck knew; his natural leaning toward Russia would not. So the Chancellor must act at once.

Moreover, if negotiations for alliance were longer delayed, they might be menaced from Austria. Count Julius Andrassy, the able Hungarian who was Foreign Minister for the Dual Monarchy, was the firm friend of Germany; but Andrassy was about to resign, and his downfall might well mean the triumph of anti-Prussian forces at Vienna. Bismarck telegraphed Andrassy that he wished to see him, and Gastein was fixed as an immediate meeting place. Professor Coolidge explains:

> A close alliance between Germany and Austria was an idea which Bismarck had entertained before and even informally suggested. This may seem strange in one who had risen to greatness by his resolute anti-Austrian policy, which had triumphed in the war of 1866, and had led to the aggrandizement of Prussia and to the expulsion of Austria from the German Confederation. Yet, much as he had disliked the previous hollow friendship between Vienna and Berlin, which he had believed to be entirely to the advantage of the former, and convinced as he was that Prussia could only fulfill her ambitions by a successful war with Austria, none the less, even before the war was finished, he had begun to look forward to better relations in the future. The obstinacy with which in the hour of victory he had stood out against the eager wish of his master and of the Prussian military leaders for an acquisition of Austrian territory was due only in part to the immediate dangers that he perceived in case Prussia should show herself immoderate in her demands. It was also due to his extraordinary foresight as to the advantages of not alienating Austria permanently, but of leaving the way open to a subsequent reconciliation. In the League of the Three Emperors, Bismarck had already reaped a first reward for this policy, and he was now to reap a further one when he believed the moment had come to guarantee Germany against Russian resentment.

The friendship between Russia and Prussia was of old standing. For over a century, since the alliance concluded between Catherine II and Frederick the Great in 1764, the two countries, although at times there had been coolness between them, had never been at war with one another, except, nominally, during the Moscow campaign of Napoleon I. Their soldiers had fought side by side at the battle of Leipsic and on other glorious fields, they had entered Paris in triumph together, and Emperor William himself, then a boy, had taken part in that triumphant entry. Since then the two countries had often befriended each other to the advantage of both. The closely related Courts of Berlin and St. Petersburg had been on intimate terms, and the sovereigns were bound together by sincere mutual affection. But such sentimental considerations did not weigh with Bismarck. Earlier in his career the friendship of Russia had brought him great benefits for which he had had to pay little in return. He was not disposed now to pay much and get little. If Russia had been willing to give him a free hand against France, his attitude might have been different, but, as he later wrote in his memoirs: "That for Russian policy there is a limit beyond which the importance of France in Europe must not be decreased is explicable. That limit was reached, as I believe, at the Peace of Frankfort—a fact which in 1870 and 1871 was not so completely realized at St. Petersburg as five years later. I hardly think that during our war the Russian Cabinet clearly foresaw that, when it was over, Russia would have as neighbor so strong and so consolidated a Germany." This was true, and whatever may have been Bismarck's designs in 1875, the famous war scare at least made clear that Russia was not minded to permit him to attack France.

Another consideration also weighed with him. He says later in his memoirs: "In point of material force, I held a union with Russia to have the advantage," and history has shown that this assumption was correct. On the other hand, Germany had great material force of her own, so great that in an alliance between her and Austria there could be little doubt as to which would be the dominant partner—as again later events have proved. With Russia there was no such prospect. * * * Russia was too mighty, too proud, and too ambitious a State to remain long content with the rôle of second fiddle. She would wish to receive at least as much as she gave, especially as she believed there was a good balance due her already, and she would not be likely to alienate for long her own liberty of action. * * *

This does not mean that under certain circumstances, and if paid his price, Bismarck might not have gone back to the policy of a close alliance with Russia, even to a certain extent at Austrian expense, and such a policy is probably what would have best pleased his sovereign. But neither Russia nor Germany was ready at the last analysis to grant the other a perfectly free hand as against France and Austria respectively.

This crops up again and again, as Professor Coolidge points out, in the history of those few years that began with the war scare of 1875. Russia and Austria, although never actually at war until 1914, have been rivals in the Near East since early in the eighteenth century, and their latent antagonism has again and again threatened European peace. Germany viewed the rapid recuperation of France from the defeat of 1870 with the growing conviction that her enemy must be crushed still further ere she became strong enough to undertake revenge. In 1875 Bismarck was given clearly to understand that Russia would not at that time stand by and see France reduced to impotence, and Bismarck was not the man to forget a repulse like that. Nor was Germany minded to allow Russia to defeat Austria.

If Germany was now threatened by Russian hostility, it was obvious who and what had angered the Czar. But Bismarck and Andrassy wasted no time, and it was agreed that the former should proceed to Vienna and enter into formal negotiations. Francis Joseph was delighted. But the German Emperor was not. Here began the Chancellor's trouble with his master:

Although offended at the tone of his nephew, he still clung to the hereditary friendship between Berlin and St. Petersburg, and he was just sending General Manteuffel, with a special message to the Czar. He also had not entirely got over his old distrust of Austria. He telegraphed, accordingly, to Gastein, forbidding Bismarck's journey to Vienna, and only gave his consent after the most vigorous remonstrances on the part of the Chancellor, who declared that his own position and further continuation in office would be impossible if he were to be disavowed in this manner. Emperor William yielded with reluctance, and presently, in answer to an invitation from Czar

Chartering Committee's Head Discusses Plans

Welding Ring Tells of Grave Shipping Problems Now Confronting the Country and of Others Coming After the War

By RICHARD BARRY.

THE long arm of the Federal Government has reached into a dingy little office a block from the New York Custom House, and has chosen a plain old-fashioned man, to whose desk any one can walk unimpeded by clerks or boys—as one formerly could walk to the desk of the elder Pierpont Morgan—and has clothed him with a power all but imperial.

You reach this new lord of the seas up a rickety elevator and through a door which bears not his own name, but the fascinating one of "Mailler and Quereau," and it appears on inquiry that he is "Mailler and Quereau," commission merchants, with interests largely in Australian and New Zealand shipping.

There is a fair-sized room with several clerks immersed in solid ledgers, and you ask for "Mr. Ring," anticipating the usual punctilious formality requisite in approaching the seats of the mighty, but one of the clerks jerks his thumb inward and you follow the direction of the eloquent motion into an oblong bit of office.

Whereupon you introduce yourself to Mr. Welding Ring, appointed last week by President Wilson as Chairman of the Chartering Committee of the United States Shipping Board. The Chartering Committee will have sole jurisdiction over the movement of every ship leaving every port of the United States for the period of the war. And not only over its movement, which is important, but over the character of its freight, which is vital. It will be up to the Chartering Committee to say whether leather or wheat, oats or munitions, beef or rubber, or whatnot shall be shipped abroad; whether it shall go to England or to France, to Spain or to Italy, or anywhere else.

The new autocrat greets you with a smile. Before him is a pile of letters and papers and checks, through which he flutters with deft indirection, calling out cheerily that he has nothing to say for publication, and that if you will wait a minute he will say it.

Previously I had tried to find out how Mr. Ring got this new job, but it seems the job "got" him. He was drafted. Some weeks ago the members of the Shipping Board instituted inquiries in shipping circles in New York to locate the man best fitted to head the committee which will act as a priority board regarding ocean freight shipments, seeing to it that the business most directly important in winning the war gets the right of way, and in general acting as a balance wheel on ocean trade. This committee will have a relation to ocean traffic similar to that now held by the Interstate Commerce Commission toward inland traffic.

It did not take long to learn that all roads in search of such a man led to the funny old office of Mr. Ring. He is beyond doubt either a Republican or a Democrat or a Progressive or a Socialist or a Prohibitionist or a Mugwump. No one, in the present emergency, has stopped to ask that. All they know about him in Washington is that he was universally recommended in New York to head the Chartering Committee.

"Now," said Mr. Ring at last, "I am ready to answer your questions."

"How about those neutral ships?" I asked, pointing to the freighters lying idle under the Norse and Dutch flags half a mile away; "with the world crying so desperately for shipping, why not do something with them? They have been there all Summer."

"That is one of our earliest problems to settle. It will be taken up immediately. As you perhaps know, some of these ships are now loaded and have been for months loaded with foodstuffs and fodder for Norway, Sweden, Denmark, and Holland. They have not received clearance papers, and they are not allowed to have coal or oil. So they lie there, hoping against hope that there will be a change in Governmental policy, which will not occur for them, I believe, until after the war. Now it is to be our business to see if we can't induce them to work for us. So far, they have refused. A plan has been worked out for Dutch ships, for instance, which would permit them to carry on trade and earn considerable freight moneys, but they will have none of it."

"What is the plan?"

"Java has great quantities of sugar which the owners are unable to transport either to Europe or America, where it is much needed, especially in Europe. Java is a Dutch colony. We propose that these Dutch ships now lying in New York Harbor be permitted to go to Java and from there engage in the sugar trade. But no; they insist on taking provisions to Holland or doing nothing at all. From their own viewpoint one cannot blame them, for Germany has threatened that, unless Holland supplies her with certain commodities from the United States this Winter, as she did last—see the Government report recently made proving the trade with Germany through Holland—Germany will not supply Holland with any coal, and without coal from Germany it is difficult to see how Holland can keep warm this Winter. However, that is not our affair. It is our business to be sure that Germany gets no supplies from us, either indirectly or directly, and, incidentally, we would like to help the Dutch merchants realize something from their ships—provided it be from transport of sugar from Java to any of the Entente ports. It is our intention, if the Dutchmen do not change their minds, to bring pressure to bear."

"Of what kind?"

"I am not at liberty to say. But I can assure you that the pressure will be exerted, and before long, if those neutral ships persist in lying idle in this and other American harbors."

"Is it true that the two and a half million tons of shipping now being constructed in American yards under English and neutral contracts have been commandeered?"

"This matter is under consideration by the Shipping Board at Washington, and the general expectation is that all the tonnage being thus considered will be taken over by the United States, at least for the period of the war."

"Is that a part of the grand total of 9,200,000 tons planned for completion by the end of 1918?"

"Yes."

"What is being done to get seamen for the abnormal new demand that this unprecedented amount of shipping will require?"

"That is a great problem. It has been repeatedly discussed, in many phases, by the Shipping Board. Full announcement of the plans cannot be made at this time, but I can tell you this much: The navy is going to be called upon to assist the new merchant marine. Probably the bulk of our new officers will come from the naval service; perhaps from the list of warrant officers, in part. That is one reason why every effort is being made to swell the recruiting in the navy even beyond the requirements of the actual naval service. It is practically impossible to have too many trained seamen, considering the plans now under way.

"But I do not anticipate the difficulty in getting crews that many seem to look for. At the present time it is comparatively easy to outfit any vessel in this port, although wages have become startlingly high, especially in transport through the submarine zone. Each shipmaster goes into the labor market for his crew practically now for each voyage, and the wages vary with each voyage, rising with the dangers and the scarcity of men, but there is always found enough to man the ships. This condition will remain after Uncle Sam gets into the market."

"What will be the effect on ocean freight traffic, considering the terrific volume of shipbuilding now contemplated, and in part completed, if peace is declared within the coming season, or even within the coming year?"

"In my opinion there will not be the slump in business that many seem to anticipate. In the first place, there will be, for some months after the war, a large volume both of troops and munitions to retransport to the United States. Besides, Europe is not going to recover in an instant. She will be just as hungry immediately after the war as she is now. She will need just as much of all kinds of provisions, of all kinds of clothing, supplies, &c. Industries cannot recover in a minute or a week or a month. And in that intervening time we shall be on hand with our ships ready to supply their needs.

"However, we must not forget that every nation in the world is doing very much what we are doing—building ships preparatory to capturing the trade after the war. England, France, Italy, Norway, Denmark, Germany—all are building ships. Indeed, I believe that the first year after the war will see a greater tonnage on the oceans of the world than has ever been there in all recorded history, despite the appalling losses of the war."

"Have you any means of knowing what Germany is doing in that direction?"

"I know nothing that is complete or accurate. I only know that, from the very beginning of the war, Germany has been devoting all the men and money she could spare to the building of merchant ships to be ready for the moment peace is declared. She realizes full well her great losses. In this country alone we have seized 700,000 tons of her shipping. She feels that she must make that and all other losses good, and that she must be prepared immediately to enter competition with the world to feed and clothe her own people, first of all.

"The competition of these German war-built merchant ships is going to be one of the stiff factors we must meet on the declaration of peace. We must be ready for it."

Did Bismarck Unconsciously Save Democracy?

Alexander, decided to meet him and clear up the situation. Unwelcome as such a step was to Bismarck at this juncture, he was unable to do anything, except submit to his master a long memorandum on the relations between Germany, Russia, and Austria in the past, present, and future. The document, however, seems to have had little effect. On Sept. 3, at the Russian frontier town of Alexandrovo, uncle and nephew greeted each other once more. All the clouds between them soon vanished. * * * The two monarchs parted completely reconciled, and with Emperor William satisfied that his Chancellor's suspicions of Russia were without real foundation. He, therefore, rejected flatly the idea of an Austro-German alliance directed against Russia, declaring that such an act would now be dishonorable and treacherous on his part.

This brought matters to a crisis. Bismarck continued to assail his master with arguments and with threats of resignation. In answer the Emperor talked of abdicating rather than stooping to a dishonorable act. Only after obstinate resistance did he unwillingly consent to negotiations for a defensive alliance, but it must not be one that was specifically directed against Russia.

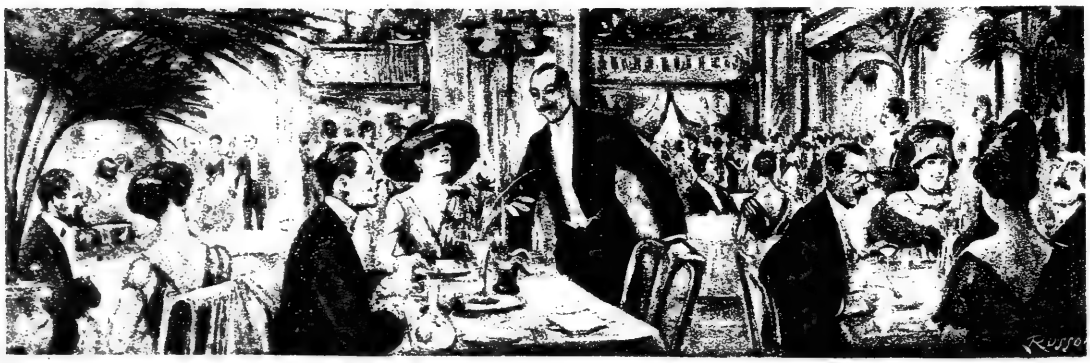
On Sept. 21 Prince Bismarck arrived in Vienna * * * Andrassy * * * refused to sign any general treaty of alliance, declaring that Austria had no quarrel with France and wished to keep on good terms with her, partly out of consideration for England. As Germany was amply able to hold her own against France without assistance, just as Austria was against Italy, an alliance for such contingencies was not necessary or desirable. The real menace was from Russia, or from a combination of Russia and some other power, and this was all that should be provided against. On this point we may suspect that Bismarck merely made a show of following the instructions given him. * * *

This led to another acute crisis. Emperor William asserted repeatedly that the proposed treaty would be an act of ill-faith on his part, after the assurances he had just interchanged with the Czar. Again he talked of abdicating rather than consenting to such a thing. Why was not the best and simplest solution to admit Russia herself to the pact, and thus renew and strengthen the League of the Three Emperors? On the other hand, Bismarck once more came forward with the threat of his own resignation. He called to his assistance the chief men of the empire. * * * The aged Emperor found himself alone. Most reluctantly he yielded to the pressure put upon him. The only concession that he was able to obtain was that, though for the present the terms of the pact were to remain secret, he might in case of need inform the Czar of its scope. To this Andrassy consented, and on Oct. 7, 1879, the Austro-German alliance was signed by him and by Prince Reuss, the German Ambassador in Vienna.

The history of the admittance of Italy to the alliance is generally well known. Bismarck had consented to the final extinction of the League of the Three Emperors because Austria and Russia were jealous of one another and because Russia, while not actually friendly toward France, set a limit upon her defeat; the hostility that constituted a menace from Russia to Germany had been aroused by Bismarck himself. But Austria and Italy were so bitterly antagonistic that only an alliance, it was openly said, could keep them from war; and Italy, though jealous of France in the matter of Tunis and the Mediterranean, was probably in no danger whatever from the nation that was her ancient friend—not Russia's. Russia, deserted by Germany, more or less in danger from Austria-Hungary, was compelled to seek alliances elsewhere; she found them in France that in 1870 she had allowed to be conquered by Germany, and in England, her bitter enemy.

We can only speculate as to what might have happened if the German Emperor, and not his Chancellor, had guided the empire's foreign policy in 1878-9. The whole matter hinges on the aged Emperor's question: "Why not admit Russia to the new league?"

Bismarck believed that a revived League of the Three Emperors would not endure. But Italy proved no substitute for the third great autocracy of Europe. And the Triple Alliance, in which Bismarck did believe, fell to pieces at the first real touch of war.



"To a casual observer it might seem as if life were going on as usual."

"Pleasure as Usual" Not New York's Motto

Rev. Dr. Manning, Rector of Trinity Church, Declares City Is Facing War Seriously in Spite of Superficial Gayety

ANY one coming to New York nowadays is sure to be struck at once by two things: One is the present fact of the war; the other is a kind of ignoring of it. The flags, the recruiting posters, the men in khaki—these are everywhere. But when the visitor crosses the portals of some place of amusement, when night falls, and the seekers after gayety begin their quest, one gets another kind of a shock. For it is all just the same as it was six months ago. The city is "having a good time."

Is "Pleasure as Usual" the motto of New York?

The Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, says that it is not. The pleasure-seeking is here, and Dr. Manning is quick to point out that there is too much of it. But he does not see in it the cause for discouragement that a casual looker-on might glimpse.

"It is true," Dr. Manning said, "that the whole country is not yet fully awakened to the seriousness of the great task before us. We do not yet realize the sacrifices which we must make for the cause of justice and freedom. It has not yet been made clear to the people as a whole that sacrifices of certain kinds are actually needed—that they must change their personal habits and give up their personal pleasures.

"It is difficult to make people realize their personal part in a war in which the fighting is being done three thousand miles away. But every one is sure to become much more conscious of this—of the individual's personal part—when our own troops are in action, and when the lists begin to come home of our brave men who have given their lives for our cause. Even now the seriousness of it all is being steadily borne in upon the people by events themselves—the departure of troops, the call of the drafted men. The only thing that will bring it home up to the last point of personal sacrifice is its becoming an actual reality.

"The country is, however," he added "realizing more and more what this war is to mean to us. And I believe that there is no city in the land where this is felt more deeply than in New York. This has been steadily manifested by the press; from the beginning our great dailies have stood openly and fearlessly for the right; and the feeling of the community has again and again blazed forth in great public meetings, expressing horror and indignation at the atrocious deeds committed in the name of Prussianism and pledging support to our Government in any and all measures to meet this menace to the world.

"To a casual observer or a visitor it might perhaps seem as though life were going on just as usual. But this is not the case. It must be remembered that there is at all times in New York a great army of visitors from all over the land. These people are in the habit of seeking recreation and pleasure while they are in the metropolis, and it is they who in large part fill our places of amusement and give the outward appearance of gayety and pleasure-seeking. They come here for amusement; their serious work is done at home, and while here they have nothing to do but seek entertainment. Later this, too, may disappear.

"But behind all this now there is the life of the city itself, and here the claims of the war upon us are being felt—not yet as fully," Dr. Manning admitted again, "as they must be and will be, but with ever-deepening seriousness and earnestness. Wherever one turns, there are evidences of this. On every hand one finds not only public agencies for war work, but groups of devoted people privately giving time and strength and money day by day. People without number are modifying their expenditures and voluntarily denying themselves things to which they have been accustomed. In all classes of society one gets a spirit similar to that of the young débutantes who are giving up their coming-out festivities. It appears in every branch of church work; every suggestion made as to work or giving for the war meets with eager and instant response. We must not forget the way in which New York responded to the Liberty Loan and to the appeal for the Red Cross, and it will respond in the same way when the next appeal comes."

Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, Rector of Trinity Church.

Thus Dr. Manning voiced his conviction that the real New York was by no means a city of callous gayeties.

"The three notes of this city," he continued, "are its energy, its ability, and its unexampled generosity."

He pointed out that the very pleasure-seeking of many New Yorkers was doubtless but one aspect of that same restless energy.

"If you can show New York a real need," he said, "that need will be met. People come here from all over the land seeking help for good causes, and none of them goes home empty-handed. There are bad influences, disloyal groups, and 'dark forces' here as elsewhere, but the city as a whole feels deeply and keenly the tremendous issues of the war. There could be no better evidence of this than the fine spirit in which our troops, including our drafted men, have answered to the call and gone to their posts of duty. We are justly proud of all of them, and New York is filled with men who will be equally ready when the call comes. The true spirit of New York is expressed in our Mayor, who has given us the best city administration we have ever had; who, like the true American he is, has stood openly and uncompromisingly for right and justice in this war, of whom every true New Yorker, whatever his political obligations and affiliations, is at heart proud."

Dr. Manning had been speaking of the general feeling and attitude of the city, and of the ways in which this "real New York" was represented. That this fine response was not yet universal, he admitted.

"Unquestionably there is too much empty and wasteful pleasure-seeking," he said. "It would be good for this city to cut down at once in its extravagant amusement. There is always waste and extravagance there. There are always people who need self-discipline, and, of course, it is true that some of those who need it most will be the last to accept it.

"Yet the underlying feeling and purpose of the city is serious. It is general now. What we should do is to recognize that serious underlying purpose and make it practically universal. We must recognize, too, that there are always a few people who are, and remain, selfish and indifferent. But I feel strongly that we should keep our eyes open to the fact that the basic response of the people of New York to the needs and conditions of the war is serious and fine. The city's pleasure-seeking should be cut down. A necessity does exist. But what we should do is to open the people's eyes to that necessity. The matter is simply that it has not yet been brought home.

"But gayety is not necessarily bad. Some gayeties are always bad. But those that are ordinarily sane and wholesome have not necessarily become culpable now. In London, and I think, too, in Paris, at a certain period in the war, the people were publicly advised to continue their amusements to a certain extent—not to give up everything. It was felt at that time that such personal sacrifices were not necessary, and that the effect on people's spirits would be bad. So far as the situation allowed, they were advised to keep up their normal lives and to be ready for sacrifice—not to spend all their energies.

"I feel now that while the waste of money at the present time is a wrong thing, we should not regard money spent on a reasonable amount of amusement as wasted. We have got to leave the regulation of recreation and pleasure to the decision of the individual. And at the same time, every individual among us ought to be putting his life on a war basis, and carefully regulating not only the use of food but all expenditures, to see that there is neither waste nor needless consumption. This is plainly incumbent upon us, I might say, so that we shall have more to give to meet the terrible needs of the war.

"There is," declared Dr. Manning, "no possible excuse for the waste of food. Here is need that has been made entirely clear by Mr. Hoover; he has made it plain for us all that there will not be enough food in the world for ourselves and our allies if we continue to be wasteful and extravagant. Our people as a whole are responding to Mr. Hoover's suggestions, and as those suggestions are made more specific and definite, they will respond more—when they are told to do this, and that, and that, specifically. Naturally, the first suggestions are more general.

"Yes, our people have already shown the spirit that guarantees ability and willingness to make whatever sacrifices may be shown to be necessary. Like the rest of the country, New York is not yet as fully aroused as it must be and will be, but it knows what is involved, for the whole world as well as for our own country, in this struggle—it is giving itself now in some real measure and it will make all sacrifices that may be required to uphold our Government in its policy of the most vigorous possible prosecution of the war until decisive victory is won over the forces which have assailed the world, and until peace and brotherhood are established—not hollow and unreal, but lasting, because based upon true principles of righteousness and justice."

Super-Golf Among American Players

Eddie Loos.

Bobby Jones.

Jock Hutchinson.

LOOK into the mirror of nature as pictured on the undulating fairway stretching some 350 yards away from the tenth tee to the tenth green on the beautiful Apawamis Golf Club's course at Rye, N. Y. Observe a green scooped from the side of a hill, rolling and without level enough to halt a pernicious little obstinate ball. Find a fairway that stretches over a hint of a hill, down through a gully, the depth of which can arouse no fear, and along a ridge of velvety texture to the sloping green. Turn back to the tee and watch Justice Mahlon Pitney, of the United States Supreme Court, about to attain perfection at golf.

Justice Pitney asks no distinction as a golfer. His knowledge of the bench has helped him somewhat to circumvent the difficulties of the modern links, yet his judicial learning has not improved his game to the extent that he expects to challenge Jerome D. Travers to an eighteen-hole struggle. Still, Justice Pitney can reach perfection occasionally—at least once—at his recreative vocation. At the tenth hole of Apawamis he achieved greatness, in his own mind, by supplying the needed accuracy, making the exact number of strokes required and sinking his ball in par figures.

He drove well off the tee and over the little gully to a position close to the sloping green. With a mashie he pitched to the hazardous, hardened green and watched his ball come to a stop thirty feet from the cup. His approach putt rolled with just the proper momentum within six inches of the hole and stopped dead. The Justice smiled, patted his putter affectionately, and walked up to the ball to finish the perfect play by dropping the ball into the cup. He had measured up to the highest test, had reached perfection at that hole. What matter if he never missed a bunker or avoided a sand pit thereafter in the round? He knew his day was a success. He would remember that tenth hole with a personal pride. He was assured of a nineteenth-hole topic which might become irksome to some listeners, but never distasteful to the teller. Justice Pitney had proved that he could play perfect golf.

Since perfection—and even super-golf—is within reaching distance of players whose handicap is as great as, or possibly greater than, that of the eminent Supreme Court Justice, the astonishing performances supplied on the links during the last few weeks by men prominent in the professional and amateur ranks must be explainable.

James Barnes—Long Jim of Whitemarsh Valley—established a new 72-hole competitive record of 283 strokes in the recent Western Golf Association open championship. He made four rounds of eighteen holes in one stroke better than 71 for each round. He had a 67 for the first eighteen holes of this round, which supplied another record for Chicago enthusiasts to gasp at. He led a field of the finest artisans of the links and in doing so played super-golf. Barnes was a good golfer when he came from England to this country. He grew up on the links, learned to erase the faults of lost motion, dug deep into the knowledge of pitch and putt until he knew just what should be done and how to do it. During his years in America he has been on or near a course almost every daylight minute of the time. He practices daily. And best of all, he is quartered at one of America's sportiest courses, Whitemarsh Valley. He can be expected to play perfectly any time he starts around a course, and in fact it is unusual if he does not.

Every course in this or any other country is laid out similarly. That is, there are certain hazards placed between tee and cup. Only these obstacles can prevent perfect play. It is possible to learn the difficulties of every course and also to know where to play to and where not to play a ball. All details must be mastered, but they can be mastered. Once they are acquired, perfect golf results. Barnes is often perfect. Others are perfect only occasionally—perhaps only once in many years. But everybody has his chance. That's the fascination of the game.

American golf, just at present, does not need to bow to that of any country. We have developed super-players on our links even without such courses as abound along the west coast of Scotland. We have several courses that compare favorably with most of the British links. On none is the turf equal to that along the Firth of Tay and Firth of Forth, but without turf we still have found a quality of play abundant with sterling results and ranking experts. Improvement of American courses has had a lot to do with the betterment of the American game. Such ideal tests of the sport as are provided at Baltusrol, Garden City, the National Links, Myopia, Merion, Braeburn, Wheaton, and Oakmont are bound to increase the ability of exponents of the sport.

It is an axiom among golfers that good courses make good golf. Sometimes a liberal expenditure of money will provide a good course, but not always. At any rate, American sportsmen have not placed much of a check on their bank rolls to bring about good golfing conditions. That the ever increasing number of links of championship rating, or links of 6,200 yards or more in length, has developed the American game to its present high standard must be admitted.

Many of the professionals of this country came from the Dundee section of Scotland, where a golf course is considered indispensable to the existence of the people. Along the foreshore and around the Firth to the Fifeshire coast, practically every foot of the shore line has been claimed for golf. Every village boy learns the talk of golf in his cradle, and as soon as he is old enough he takes to the links. It is no wonder that Great Britain has had the call on golf up to the present.

Recently a Scottish journalist was comparing American golf with that of his native land, and he was firm in his belief that America now had players of enough ability to invade England and take down the British amateur as well as the British open title. He opined that American golf as portrayed by Chick Evans, Francis Ouimet, Jerome D. Travers, Jock Hutchinson, Walter B. Hagen, and James Barnes need not ask for any handicap from the best Britain can offer.

"Give me plenty of money and full sway as to my selection of American golfers, and I promise to lift both British championships within three years," said he. "If I could take Ouimet, Evans, and Travers to England with the intention of winning the British all-comers amateur title and with the knowledge that if we failed this year we could come back the next, the mental attitude of the players would be vastly different from what it was on the last occasion the three entered the British amateur event. When Evans, Ouimet, and Travers journeyed to England the last time they were not in the best condition. They tried to do too much in a short time. The consequence was that each was eliminated in the early rounds. England has a lot of good amateurs, but none better than the trio of American leaders.

"My opinion is that America is rapidly gaining the upper hand in golf, and more through the constant improvement of the course than through the competitive play."

It is certain that there has been a vast improvement in the professional game in this country. Many of the amateurs, too, have developed rapidly. Probably Eddie Loos, the young professional of the Philadelphia Country Club, has climbed to the front rank more quickly than any other man. He was a caddie at Van Cortlandt Park before entering the ranks of instructors. At the Shawnee

Edgard Degas, Greatest Draftsman of His Century

EDGARD DEGAS at the age of 83 dies and leaves a memory of incorruptible youth. Searching for the logic of this impression, one finds it in the intensity with which he sought the highest significance of his material, an intensity that burns usually in the mind of youth, blazing a way toward ultimate achievement. Degas found his way and arrived at his achievement while he still was comparatively a young man. He interrogated the secrets of form and the secrets of movement, and was content only when he had harnessed both movement and form in his service to work harmoniously for him as they had not for any artist since the sixteenth century. He could have disciplined the turbulent Tintoretto to a finer sense of contour, Leonardo would not have disdained the science of his modeling, his line ran like a hunting dog to its prey, and he kept it up to the moment when failure of eyesight brought to an end his working period. His command over his talent is not less splendid than the talent itself. More than any modern artist and more than most of the ancients he deserves the name of master. His hand never knew the sagging of tired muscles, and his eyes saw with acuteness while they saw at all.

The complexities of modern life gave Degas an enviable opportunity to practice his immense genius for simplification. By preference he painted and drew what was difficult and tangled, reducing everything to a noble and ordered plan while keeping its aspect of the accidental. His passion for recording the gestures and movements of dancers has been recognized in all criticism of his work. He loved those strange anatomies distorted to an extraordinary muscular competency. He delighted in rehearsals, lessons, the dressing room, whatever offered the unexpected in pose and action; he was amazing at the moment of appearance before the audience, the trained limbs of the dancer springing high into the air, he was no less amazing as the curtain fell upon deep curtsies and wide-flung arms. In these pictures of the stage Harlequin pursues Columbine, the little daughter of the poor comes with her mother to seek admission to the class, the dancers practice before the professor innocent of all the aids to beauty they later would make use of; the professional dancers leap across the stage, describing beautiful arabesques, while the orchestra plays and colored lights irradiate their filmy skirts; the whole history of the dance of his generation, the now superseded ballet, is written in pigment and chalk on his pages with such fullness and authority that one thinks of him as the historian of this subject alone and forgets the multitude of other themes engaging his unwearying attention. Perhaps his "Miss Lala at the Fernando Circus" is finer than any of his dancers. The woman hangs from a rope by her teeth near the ceiling of the vast room. The rhythm of her limbs playing for steadiness like the wings of a bird is rendered with superb freedom and understanding. Her strong body reveals in every muscle the strain of her effort. She is no insubstantial fairy of the footlights, but a mighty creature developed at every point and depending upon her trained strength to perform what seems to the audience far below a miracle. With a certain instinct for balance and contrast, Degas has shown this quivering figure magnificently fighting for its poise against an architectural background of arches and serene horizontals at once enhancing the action and providing the mind with a sense of security and steadiness.

Race horses form another of his favorite subjects, and here again slim legs and powerful necks, muscles developed to meet an unusual demand, a special accord between the creature and the task required of it, play a prominent part in the interest of the work. Nude forms solicit his interest on the same side, that of muscular response to effort. His women are not the quiescent naked figures of contemporary painters clearly posed for deliberate study. They are getting into or out of the bath with a buoyant ease of motion, they are scrubbing themselves with big, vigorous movements, they are bending over to pick up a sponge with the gesture of an athlete or energetically brushing their hair. Whatever they do is done with a will and as the commonplace task of the day, free from any taint of self-consciousness. These women of Degas make even the simple models of Manet's canvases seem oversophisticated and disingenuous.

Washing and ironing were forms of labor that pleased him, again giving him a chance to emphasize the adequacy of well-developed muscles. Millet's "Spaders" put no more energy into their vehement action than this burly laundress, her head down, her hands exerting a heavy pressure on the iron. And those girls carrying home their baskets of clothes have nothing of Parisian sprightliness in their great bulk, but they lift their burden with an easy rhythm, the lines of their bodies flowing with as beautiful a grace as the lines of a Greek statue of the fifth century. Workers were the favorite models of Degas, work was his favorite theme. It was not the work of the fields that meant to Millet weariness or the work of the mines that meant to Meunier despair, but the work of people who lived by the labor they could do best and for which they were chosen by the selection of the fittest. Degas saw them with the eyes of an artist, who himself was doing the hard thing well with a special fitness for triumphing in it. He drew them with neither sentiment nor cynicism, but with an overpowering interest in the problems they presented to his mind. He expresses a modern ideal of energy, and uses a modern language for its expression. In order to say what he wanted to he was obliged to master the human figure, and this he did with the thoroughness of the ancients. Since then none has equaled him in pure draftsmanship.

Art at Home and Abroad

"Ballet Dancer" by Edgard Degas, Who Died Last Week.

Art School Work at Art Alliance.

The work of the Summer art schools, gathered from different parts of the country, is on exhibition until Friday of this week at the galleries of the Art Alliance of America.

New York is represented by the Art Students' League and by the New York University Summer School. The former group includes a number of portrait studies carefully modeled and obviously seen under a studio light. The landscape studies also indicate that much attention has been paid to the scrupulous modeling of the forms. There are two or three little studies of golden color, but most of the palettes incline toward the darker blues and greens. In the composition there is a commendable tendency to emphasize simplicity and dignity of mass.

The New York University Summer School shows the work of teachers, who, for the improvement of their work, have become students in Summer. Thus the general aspect of the walls is that of the high school exhibition professionally enriched. The problems are similar to those offered to the high school pupils, and display the greatest variety of subject and treatment. There are free-hand plates, in which abstract line and spot are turned into pattern without the intervention of a given motif. Other plates show adaptation, in several instances brilliantly original, of bird and flower motifs. There are designs for special materials—silks, glass, metal, &c.—and, not least, there is a group of beautiful pencil drawings, in which the character of the medium is respected to a degree unusual in the present day with its aversion to the modest lead point as a means to expression.

The Summer School of the Pennsylvania Academy, recently established at Chester Springs, sends a highly significant exhibit. The full sense of outdoors is felt throughout, and the landscape has been analyzed and understood; subjected to a really searching interrogation of form as revealed by light and shade. There is, of course, much diversity of both treatment and achievement; some of the work is done in a spirit of modernism more imitative than spontaneous, and some of it is indifferent to even the broader relations of planes; but most of it is remarkably fresh and intelligent, giving an idea of what a Summer school of landscape may become under favorable conditions. One little dooryard scene is remarkable in its authoritative solution of a very complicated subject.

The Chicago Academy of Fine Arts makes a less fortunate impression, the fundamentals of construction and proportion having been neglected in favor of the appearance of finish. This cannot be said of the Berkshire Summer School, which offers pages of notebook drawings from nature, together with a large number of commercial illustrations. The drawings are so carefully and often sensitively done that one must regret the commonplace aspect of the little advertising designs, admirably adapted to crude processes of reproduction, but tightly held to a commercial ideal. One wall is given to a few war posters from Tulane School at New Orleans.

Braquemond's Etchings.

An exhibition of Braquemond's etchings will be at the Keppel Galleries until Oct. 20. It includes a number of the portrait etchings, Legros, Manet, Charles Kean, Meyer-Heine, and Braquemond himself, etched by Rajon after the painting. "Le Printemps" and "The Man with the Hoe" after the paintings by Millet are performances of the first order, and show how completely such an interpreter as Braquemond can subjugate himself to the mood of his original. One sees almost more clearly than in the paintings the greatness and weakness of the painter, his largeness of generalization, and his softness of modeling. In the amusing attitudes and gestures of the barnyard fowl in the Spring subject Braquemond adds to his interpretation the skill of a specialist and intensifies the character of the birds as Millet saw and revealed it. A very interesting comparison may be made between Braquemond's drawing of "Le Lapin de Garenne" and the two states of the etching; practically none of the first vivacious impression has evaporated in the course of translation. A large part of Braquemond's peculiar charm lies in his sense of humor. It shows especially in his drawings of ducks, for whose movements and expressions he has a particular facility. Observe the concentration of the competitors in "Le Point d'Interrogation" and the irresistibly comic and characteristically Gallic treatment of the "Canards Surpris" with its little Susanna naïvely mocking the situation.

Exhibition of Water Color Club.

The twenty-eighth annual exhibition of the New York Water Color Club will be held in the galleries of the American Fine Arts Society, 215 West Fifty-seventh Street, New York, opening to the public Saturday, Nov. 3, and closing Nov, 25. Pictures will be received at the galleries on Friday and Saturday, Oct. 19 and 20, from 10 A. M. to 5 P. M. The Hudnut prize of $100 will be awarded to the most meritorious water color. The Jury of Selection are George Elmer Brown, Eliot Clark, C. C. Cooper, E. I. Couse, C. C. Curran, Miss Felicia W. Howell, George Luks, Miss Alethea H. Platt, Edward Potthast, W. S. Robinson, Mrs. Florence Frances Snell, and Cullen Yates.

open a few weeks ago. Loos led a field in which every professional of worth was entered. He did not play record golf, but he was perfect for 72 holes, which was enough to beat the field. At the national patriotic open tournament, held at Whitemarsh Valley a few months ago, Loos and Hutchinson were paired to play in the final eighteen holes, and, of course, attracted the gallery. Both had done exceptionally well for 54 holes, and headed for home on the final round, each with a chance to win the tournament. For seventeen holes they played at even 4s and drove for the eighteenth on exactly even terms. Loos was unfortunate in getting into a pit which guards the sloping eighteenth green, and, although his pitch out was remarkably accurate, he missed the putt for his 4 and had to be content with a 73 for the round. Hutchinson got his 4, and incidentally won the tournament, with 292 for the four trips around the course.

Hutchinson and Loos have made General Par and Colonel Bogey unhappy for the greater part of the year. They have displayed a brand of golf consistently better than any others, and both in a way are American products of the links. Hutchinson was born in Scotland, but he learned the art of golf right here.

Outside of a few younger players, the American amateur game has not improved a great deal this Summer. Most observers believe that the lack of tournament competition can be blamed for this. Bobby Jones, the youthful Atlantan, who acquired the Southern amateur championship during the Summer, probably established himself as the most improved amateur. His game during the Professional Golfers' Association team matches stood out. He met and defeated on even terms Fred McLeod of Columbia, former national champion; Emmett French of York, and Cyril Walker of Shackamaxon, three professionals who have been near the top in America for some time. Jones, of course, made his big bid for fame last year, when he astonished a lot of experts in the national championship at Merion, but he never achieved such greatness as over the Baltusrol, Siwanoy, and Garden City courses during the team matches.

Had not the war prevented the national amateur championship, which was to have been played at Oakmont in August, there would have been an assemblage of young golfers who would have awakened the golfing enthusiasm of the country. Besides Jones, Atlanta has three other youngsters who can get from tee to cup with an uncanny lack of waste strokes. Perry Adair, Dick Bickey, and Tom Prescott are not more than one stroke behind Jones in ability, and not one of them is 21 yet. Atlanta has been most fortunate in developing an interest in golf among its younger generation. Several of the residents of the Georgia city came to this country from Scotland, and they brought their Scottish love for golf with them. The result was the erection of several good courses and the advancement to the front ranks of the four boys mentioned, as well as of Miss Alexa Stirling, this year's woman champion.

American golf is improving and becoming a more popular sport every day. Courses are being built for public, semi-public, and private uses. The game already has lost its exclusiveness, and is daily attracting the bulk of the people. Maybe that is one of the reasons why such remarkable improvement in the play is being noted.

And Now Greenwich Village Has a Woman Guide!

Miss Adele Kennedy, Who Personally Conducts Strangers Through the Art Zone Around Washington Square.

OLD GREENWICH VILLAGE has a guide. It is something new for that interesting part of the town, which has had nearly everything, good, bad, and indifferent, since the days of the Dutch Governor, Wouter van Twiller, who appropriated its broad acres for his private tobacco plantation. Miss Adele Kennedy is the one who "knows it all" for the benefit of the stranger within that quarter, where the streets have such a careless way of twisting about that a guide is really a necessity. She combines the protective duties of a chaperone with the sightseeing progressiveness of a guide.

"They come down here to see freaks, I am sure of it," said she. "They are primed for thrills, rather anxious to be shocked, and I have a suspicion that some of my parties have actually expected to see undraped models walking around the studios. But they go away satisfied, even if not unduly shocked, and evidently they give graphic descriptions of their experiences, as friends from their home town often come to me for personally conducted tours."

It was while Miss Kennedy was standing one day in front of the Pirates' Den, on the south side of Sheridan Square, next door to a rickety tenement approached by a diminutive alley, that the inspiration seized her to be a guide. On the opposite side of the square, gazing up at the row of ferocious bandits over the entrance to the low building designated as the Treasure Shop, was a party of sightseers.

"What a lark it would be to show them around," thought Miss Kennedy.

The visitors accepted her offer with alacrity. Tea in a tiny room in the basement of an old Sheridan Square residence was the first experience. This was followed by an inspection of curious streets, visits to a studio or two, and then dinner in Fourth Street, near Washington Square, among artists of various degrees, poets ditto, Socialists and disciples of other cults—for, as the guide explained, naïvely, "we do have some radicals down here"—and bob-haired girls wearing their studio smocks.

"If you don't eat 35 cents' worth here," volunteered the guide, "you will be charged 5 cents for bread and butter. The war prices forced that rule because it was found that many villagers were eating nearly all the bread generously placed on each table, and getting away with it for a ten or fifteen cent check."

The diner to whom money is no object may be able, by selecting canteloupe, salad, and dessert, to spend as much as 50 cents for a meal. It is all good, but the service is simpler than that at big uptown hotels, from one of the most magnificent of which the village guide was requested by telephone recently to meet a party of visitors and give them a real Greenwich Village dinner, "different from anything else."

Miss Kennedy's hair is "bobbed," a sign that she is a member in good standing of the art colony of the Sheridan and South Washington Square colonies. Her nature-loving instincts led her early in the Summer to abandon shoes and stockings as non-essentials. Going around Greenwich Village with a good-looking barefooted guide was an experience that many a Far Western tourist still recalls with a smile of delight. She now wears sandals, but no stockings.

"I had to come to it," she explained, "because there is so much digging, tearing down, and repairing going on in this old neighborhood that I could not walk around comfortably."

"Oh, yes, I do get parties of New Yorkers," said Miss Kennedy, in talking about the personalities of the tourists that she initiates into some of old Greenwich's mysteries. "It is a strange city to most of them. There are many New Yorkers who are more ignorant of their home town than are many travelers from the Pacific Coast. I can tell from the questions they ask.

"As a study of human nature, I get fully as much amusement out of them as they seem to find in me and what I show them.

"I have been the village guide for about six months, and have had parties from San Francisco, Los Angeles, Baltimore, Asheville, New Orleans, Tacoma, Sioux City, Milwaukee, Chicago, San Antonio, and scores of other places. The largest delegation I ever tackled was a party of 300 women from a club in Bayonne. I had to take them around in relays of twenty each. It is impossible to take more than that number at one time around Greenwich Village, for hardly any of the little tearooms, art gift shops, and studios will hold more than twenty."

Reichstag "Mere Sop to Progressives"

suffrage. Is this not conclusive evidence of popular participation and control? Let us see. In the first place, the electoral districts for the Reichstag have not been changed since they were formed in 1871, when Germany was dominantly agricultural, rural. The great increase in population has been in the cities, and these are the homes of the Liberals and Radicals. It would have been dangerous to change the districts. This would have given the Liberals and Radicals full representation. Today Berlin should have at least twenty representatives, and elects only eight. The number of voters in agricultural districts equal to those of Berlin returned forty-eight members. In 1907 twenty seats were won by the Conservatives, with an average vote of 10,500, and six by Socialists, with an average vote of 77,500. The average vote for all Socialist members was 67,000, and for all Conservatives, 25,680. The significance of this can readily be seen when it is stated that out of 12,260,000 votes cast in 1912, 1,662,000 were National Liberal, 1,996,000 represented the strength of the Centre Party, 1,126,000 that of the Conservative, and 5,750,000 that of the Socialist and Radical Parties.

But in reality this makes little difference. The Reichstag is little more than a debating society. It was intended to be nothing more, to be a "sop" to the progressives. Its powers are great on paper but exceedingly small in reality. It has the constitutional function of passing on the budget, but the principal revenue laws are permanent. The Reichstag can neither increase nor decrease the schedules, nor make any change in the existing situation unless the King of Prussia wishes it. This comes about in this way: The Bundesrat is the upper house of the Imperial Parliament. Its members are delegates from the various States, representing several State Governments, and not the people. They vote according to instructions, and one member may cast the vote for any delegation. Fourteen members can defeat any measure and the Government of Prussia, that is, the King of Prussia, controls twenty votes.

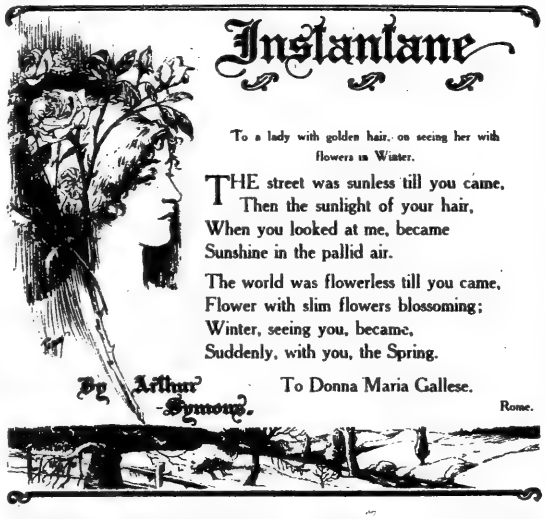
The Reichstag does not really initiate legislation. Important measures are first discussed in the Bundesrat, then they go to the Reichstag and back to the Bundesrat for approval. The initiative for the most part comes from the Chancellor, who is also Prime Minister of Prussia. The ruler, as Emperor, may instruct the Chancellor to prepare a measure, as King he may order him to introduce it and may direct amendments to be made and prevent changes. As Emperor he may promulgate the law, and as King he administers it in Prussia. There is no Imperial Cabinet. The Chancellor is the only Minister. The other heads of departments act independently of each other, but under the supervision of the Chancellor. The Chancellor is not in the slightest degree responsible to Parliament or to the people, but solely to the Emperor.

Of the 397 members of the Reichstag Prussia sends 236. The body can be dissolved at any time by the Bundesrat with the consent of the Emperor. This power has been used effectively three times to break down the resistance of the Reichstag; in 1878, when it refused to pass the bill to suppress the Socialists; in 1887, when it would not agree to fix the size of the army for seven years; and, in 1893, when it declined to change the military system. In each case the new body did what the Government demanded. Since the principal financial arrangements are matters of standing law, if the Reichstag refuses to pass a new budget increasing allowances, or passes one reducing them, the Government can be carried on on the old basis without any action on the part of Parliament.

The upper house, the Bundesrat, consists of 61 instructed delegates, usually officers of State, frequently Ministers, voting under instruction and appointed without fixed tenure. Of this number Prussia controls 20. This body and the King of Prussia dominates the Reichstag.

By the Constitution, the Presidency of the Confederation belongs to the King of Prussia. He appoints the Chancellor and most other officers, directs foreign affairs, commands the army and navy of the whole empire, inspects and disposes of troops, appoints all officers whose commands include the contingent of the State, and the selection of all general officers is subject to his approval. Prussian military regulations are enforced throughout the empire. The Emperor declares defensive war, and there is no authority to determine what war is defensive and what offensive. Bismarck's principal aim was to create a powerful military State. All the world knows how well he succeeded.

Many of the foregoing important direct powers belong to the Emperor. Obviously, larger powers accrue to him by virtue of the fact that he is King of Prussia and that Prussia is Germany.



The Emperor, as such, has no material rights in legislation, no authority to appoint or to disapprove laws, yet he constantly does these things. He has no power to issue decrees, yet here also, says Zorn, the German publicist:

> The monarchical principle, without legal provisions, and indeed contrary to them, has forced recognition. * * * We, Wilhelm, by grace of God, German Emperor, order with the consent of the Bundesrat.

Again Zorn says:

> The inspiring forces of the world's history and the magnitude of his actual power have given the Emperor a position wholly different from what was legally intended and places him on a par with monarchical Emperors—we see how formally inspired and even constitutional provisions lose their force in face of the constraining necessities of national life.

So the Prussianizing of Germany is complete. There is normally a higher law in Germany than the Constitution. That law is the law of necessity or might.

Let us take a more intimate view of Prussia and ascertain what are the arrangements of this dominant member, what chance is afforded the people for expression. Take her Parliament, the Landtag. What does it represent? Is there a Government responsible to the people? The Landtag has two chambers, the House of Lords, and the lower house. The former is a mediaeval body composed of Princes of royal blood, members who are independent Princes of the Holy Roman Empire, or hereditary members designated at will by the King, and others designated by him at will or on nomination of landholders. The King can control it at any time by appointing new members. It now has a membership of 360, one-third hereditary nobles with large estates, junkers, and one-third dominated by landholders, junkers. It is a class assembly.

The lower house is composed of members elected indirectly by an electoral body. One member is selected in each district. The electoral body is selected in this fashion: One-third of it is designated by the large taxpayers who pay the first third of the taxes, one-third by those who pay the second third of the taxes, and the remainder by the rest of the voters. From 3 to 5 per cent. of the voters choose one-third of the electors; from 10 to 12 per cent. a third, or about 15 per cent. of the voters choose 213 of the electors.

In 2,200 districts one man selects a third of the electors. In 1908 the number of votes cast was 2,215,000. The Social Democrats, with 601,000 votes, elected seven members. They should have had 105. The Conservatives, with 356,000 votes, elected 152. They were entitled to 62. The Clericals, with 502,000 votes, won 104 seats instead of 88, their proper number. The Liberal Party got 28 instead of 40. In East Prussia the number of inhabitants to a representative was 63,000; in Berlin, 170,000. Berlin had 9 votes and should have had 24. One-fourth the population in agricultural districts selected 161 members; one-fourth in the cities elected 41. Remember, too, that the ballot is not secret, and that pressure is consistently brought to bear on the lower class voter. The municipal councils are selected in the same way. The classes rule.

The province is the highest subdivision of Prussia. Its chief executive is appointed by the King. Its legislative body is not elected by the people but by legislative bodies of the next lowest subdivisions, the circles and the municipalities. The President may veto the action of the body if it goes beyond its jurisdiction. Its measures must be approved by the King, who may dissolve it at will.

The circle is the chief local subdivision. Its principal administrative officer is appointed by the President of the province. The members of its legislative body, the Kreistag, are divided between the cities and the rural districts, not more than one-half to the cities. The members assigned to the cities are not elected directly by the people but by the municipal assemblies, which represent property. The rural members are divided into two equal groups; the great landowners and large taxpayers of the rural community elect half; the other half are elected indirectly by a body composed first, of those who pay a small tax; second, of proprietors of manors, and, third, of electors selected by rural communal assemblies.

To be a voter even for one of these electors, who shares the doubtful privilege of joining larger taxpayers and owners of mediaeval manors in selecting half the rural members of the local assembly the other half of which is controlled absolutely by wealth, the individual himself must be a small taxpayer. This is certainly placing the individual, the man, politically at the vanishing point.

There is no manhood suffrage in Prussia, in Germany, where it counts for anything. It does not count for anything so far as the Reichstag is concerned. Evidently in Prussia it is nonexistent. Landowners and men of industrial standing are strongly intrenched. They have dug themselves in and made their administrative and legislative trenches of reinforced concrete. The junker is not only on top; he is pyramided. Autocracy, absolutism, is supreme.

Granted that the ruling class does its paternalistic job for the people as well as such a job can be done by a few for the many, at best it must be inadequately done; for no part of the people can understand the needs of all the people and satisfy them as well as all the people can.

This governing class, believing in expansion by armed force, provoked war, violated the neutrality of Belgium, directed the submarine campaign, sweeping aside international law and custom built up through the centuries, sinking great passenger and freight vessels like the Lusitania, the Arabic, and the Sussex, slaughtering women and children. It ordered the deportation of Belgian civilians, planned and executed the campaign of spying and violence in this and other neutral countries, and directed the submarine negotiations with all its evasions, cynicism, and duplicity, again and again making solemn promises, constantly violating them and finally brazenly breaking their most solemn pledge to a great, patient, peaceful power.

The President told us that for a little while he was unable to believe that such things would, in fact, be done by any Government as have been done by Germany during this war. It was difficult for the American people to credit it. It is yet difficult to believe that the great masses of the German people, if they were fully informed, would sanction it. It is only through a knowledge of th character and mediaeval ideals of the few who dominate Prussia and Germany that we can begin to understand it. With such information we can more easily appreciate what was in the President's mind when he said:

> "We have no quarrel with the German people. * * * It was not upon their impulse that their Government acted in entering the war. It was not with their previous knowledge or approval. It was a war determined upon as wars used to be determined upon in the old unhappy days when peoples nowhere were consulted by their rulers and wars were provoked and waged in the interests of dynasties or by little groups of ambitious men who were accustomed to use their fellow-men as tools. * * *

Was he not clearly right when he asserted in his answer to his Holiness the Pope:

> "We cannot take the word of the present rulers of Germany as a guarantee of anything that is to endure unless explicitly supported by such conclusive evidence of the will and purpose of the German people themselves as the other peoples of the world would be justified in accepting. Without such guarantees, treaties of settlement, agreements for disarmament, covenants to set up arbitration in the place of force, territorial adjustments, reconstitutions of small nations, if made with the German Government, no man, no nation can now depend on. We must await some new evidence of the purposes of the great peoples of the Central Powers."

"Hey Tom—Tom Sawyer!"

DOWN the centuries will ring that one small boy's cry.

To the laughter and tears of men and women—of small boys and girls—it has rung 'round the world.

You who have laughed so often at Huckleberry Finn and Tom Sawyer—have you ever stopped to think how much of serious thought Mark Twain has put into these books? How much of himself—of his own boyhood—he has put into ragged, mixed up, lovable Huck Finn—into irresistible Tom Sawyer.

For Mark Twain was just such a boy himself. A poor boy on the Mississippi—full of mischief, hope and fear.

And—Mark Twain walked with the kings of the earth—kings crowned and uncrowned—kings of empires—of letters—of art.

That poor, small, Mississippi boy "walked such a broad and brilliant highway, with flags flying and crowds following after." And still the crowds follow—still he is loved—no, worshipped—in the far ends of the earth—in our own little village and farm—sophisticated Fifth Avenue and simple country schoolboy meet on common ground in

We have been very glad and proud for these many years to be able to offer you Mark Twain's works, well bound, well printed and altogether well made, at a low price. And—it is with deep regret that we find we must discontinue that offer.

The price of paper, of cloth, of everything that goes into the making of books has climbed to unheard of heights. We should have raised the price of these books long ago, but for Mark Twain's sake we kept the low price as long as possible. The last paper that we could get at a reasonable price is about to be used up.

If there are any more sets made they will have to be made at a higher price. Don't wait. Get your set now.

We have shipped sets to China and Japan, to Australia and Turkey—to Norway and Spain—to the Gold Coast in South Africa and to The Argentine—for Mark Twain has been translated into more languages than any other American.

One day last Christmas three thousand orders for Mark Twain lay on one desk waiting to be filled. When orders come in at the rate of three thousand a day the one who waits until the last moment gets nothing.

AN ADVENTURE IN BUSINESS.
(Not from the Arabian Nights.)
Mr. Mc—— (32 years of age), who has been a successful lumber salesman nearly all his life, found himself recently without a position. Happening through a happy chance to read our advertisement, he decided that HERE was an opportunity to capitalize his selling abilities for more money than he had been receiving. Result of his first eight weeks' work with us, over $1,400 in cash commissions, and he has deferred equities in the business of approximately the same amount.
This is a human document open to your scrutiny—a story from real life, the hero of which is now in our employ. Best of all, it can be duplicated by an energetic man who has the work habit, combined with our original selling methods. We have a similar opening for one or two successful salesmen who can furnish gilt-edge references. L. A. Cerf, General Agent, Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company, 135 Broadway, New York.

Suburban Buying in Queens and Adjacent Home Communities—The Leasing Market.

An interesting sale in the downtown section was closed yesterday in the purchase by John F. Drake of the old four-story building at 42 John Street, 20 by 81, between Nassau and William Streets, and adjoining on the east the historic John Street Methodist Church. The purchase was made from City Real Estate Company. Mr. Drake is the proprietor of Rolfe's Chop House, which has been located at 42 John Street for half a century. It was established in 1848, and was conducted by the Rolfe family until its purchase several years ago by Thomas C. Innd, who conducted the business until his death in 1914. The old business will be continued in its original quarters by Mr. Drake.

Horace S. Ely & Co. were the brokers in the sale.

Apartment House Sales.

The five-story apartment house at 29 West Eighty-fourth Street, 24.6 by 100.2, between Central Park West and Columbus Avenue, has been sold by Gustav A. Kerker, who has owned it for twenty-five years. Gustave Kohler was the broker. The property is assessed at $33,000.

The Houghton Company has sold for Charles Wynne the five-story apartment house at 522 West 123d Street, on lot 33.2 by 100, to Thomas Comba.

Private House Sales.

Smith & Mitchell have sold for Carrie J. Rosenthall the three-story dwelling at 908 West 137th Street, on lot 19 by 99.11, to Alfred and Christiana Grey.

J. Edgar Leaycraft & Co. have sold for the New York Life Insurance and Trust Company the three-story dwelling at 111 West 131st Street.

Brooklyn.

The plot 50 by 100 on the east side of Grand Avenue, 215 feet south of Park Avenue, has been sold by the Buckley & Horton Company for Charles A. Wheeler to a client for improvement.

Houses have been sold by the Realty Associates at 1148 Fifty-fourth Street to Stephen McKeough; at 156 Crown Street to Clarence J. Von Hofe, and at 323 Thirty-sixth Street to Francesca Castellano.

Queens Borough Sales.

The recent transfer of nearly 300 lots in Long Island City to the Interstate Land Holding Company will make no change in the agency of the property. The Cross & Brown Company will represent the Interstate Land Holding Company in the development and construction work, as heretofore conducted for the former owner, Frederick Ayer. The Cross & Brown Company has closed a transaction with a Western automobile company for the erection of a building on a plot 100 by 150.

J. A. Whitney sold to C. M. Cornell the dwelling and plot, 100 by 172 feet, on the southeast corner of Springfield and Clinton Avenues, Springfield.

C. A. Wadley, as trustee, sold to John F. Trommer the store and dwelling, 98 by 100 feet, on the east side of Seventh Street, 300 feet south of Lawrence Street, Bayside.

William H. Williams has purchased from the Royalton Realty Company the property, 50 by 100 feet, on the north side of Potter Avenue, fifty feet east of Theodore Street, Long Island City.

Long Island.

Daniel M. Gerard has sold for Mrs. Thomas F. Byrnes a plot of five acres at Northport, with improvements, to Robert W. Pollock.

Edwin N. Rowley has sold for Dr. Z. Preston Fuller his country home at Northport, to J. S. P. des Garennes.

Westchester.

The Scarsdale Estates, Robert E. Farley, President, has sold a plot on Fenimore Road, in the Murray Hill section of Scarsdale, to Edward O. Dorman.

L. Covert has sold for Gilbert Elliott a cottage at 9 Valley Road, White Plains, to Theodore R. Fisher, who gave in part payment a plot with house and garage at Huntington Terrace, Huntington, L. I.

J. Sterling Drake has sold for George D. Harrison, to Mrs. Lilian V. Derrenbacher, a plot 75 by 212 on the east side of Webster Avenue, just north of Winyah Avenue, New Rochelle. Mrs. Derrenbacher will erect a residence.

Commercial Leases.

Joseph P. Day leased for the estate of Jacob Appell the building at 938 Eighth Avenue to the Edward Crist Manufacturing Company of Chicago.

Carstein & Linnekin have leased the store at 3 to 7 West Twenty-ninth Street to Frank L. Nugent.

Private Dwelling Leases.

J. Edgar Leaycraft & Co. have leased for Milton L. Williams the five-story dwelling at 76 Riverside Drive.

Pease & Elliman have let, furnished, for Mrs. E. R. Straynge to A. F. Pulido the four-story dwelling at 111 East Seventieth Street.

Pepe & Brother have leased the three-story house at 50 West Twelfth Street to Mrs. C. C. Marshall.

Realty Notes.

The Duross Company has placed a loan of $10,000, at 5 per cent., on the property 599 Hudson Street for Donnelly Brothers.

Private Dwelling Leases.

Barnett & Co. have leased the dwelling, 1,063 Madison Avenue, for Paul Bolger to a client.

Douglas L. Elliman & Co. leased, furnished, for the Winter, for Russell C. Leffingwell, his residence, 144 East Sixty-fifth Street, to Captain Samuel Frothingham.

Worthington Whitehouse, Inc., leased 51 West Forty-eighth Street, a five-story dwelling, furnished, for the season, for the No. 51 West Forty-eighth Street Corporation, to James L. Putnam.

Vasa K. Bracher leased for the estate of P. B. Worrall the four-story dwelling at 55 West Seventieth Street to Marie Seifert for a term of years.

Pease & Elliman leased for Percival C. Grover to Harry Kanter the four-story and basement dwelling at 20 West Seventy-second Street.

The Houghton Company leased the three-story and basement dwelling, 125 West Seventy-eighth Street, for Mary T. Patrick to J. M. English.

Building Men to Meet.

The regular semi-annual meeting of the Building Trades Employers' Association will be held at the association rooms, 30 to 34 West Thirty-third Street, on Tuesday, Oct. 9, at 2 P. M. The meeting is held to receive reports from the officers of the association, the Board of Governors, standing and special committees, to elect a nominating committee, to appoint three inspectors of elections, and to transact all other business that may be presented for consideration.

OPENS CHICAGO OFFICE.

Joseph P. Day Finds Demand for Factory Sites Growing Rapidly.

With the increased requirements for articles of practically every description "Made in America" and the great strides made by the United States, industrially and commercially, since the war began in Europe, there has eventuated a demand for industrial plants, which, according to Joseph P. Day, has necessitated the listing of industrial plants and sites far removed from Broadway.

While en route home from Winnipeg, Canada, less than a week ago, Mr. Day made a thorough study of conditions in Chicago and decided to open branch real estate offices there, at 39 South La Salle Street, in the heart of the city's busiest business district.

Mr. Day said yesterday: "The opening of this Western branch office is a long step toward the final development of an idea that was born eight years ago, when certain business connections made it necessary to expand my business by the addition of an Industrial Department, under the direction of R. C. Middlebrook.

"Since the outbreak of the war calls for factory and industrial sites have rolled in from many near and distant points, while our listings have assumed the same large proportions.

"Meanwhile, the pre-eminence of New York, as a financial centre, has been closely approached by its growing importance as a beehive of industry, a splendid location for new manufacturing concerns and for the enlargement of older established plants.

"There has always been, nevertheless, on the part of many of our manufacturing clients, an insistent demand for industrial plants, factory sites, waterfrontage and warehouse locations in and near various of the other large cities, as also in remote and less obvious locations, especially since the war.

"That demand, we found, could be supplied from New York, but not to so great advantage or so surely as would be possible had we another base of operations in some busy section along the more important trunk lines of freight and transportation, and Chicago was the final choice."

CROSS BAY BOULEVARD.

Rockaway Property Owners Want Work Hurried.

A special meeting of committees representing property owners from Far Rockaway, Rockaway, Broad Channel, and Howard Beach was held last week at the Howard Beach Casino, Howard Beach Estates, L. I., to hasten action on the Cross Bay Boulevard which is planned to be constructed from Woodhaven to the Rockaways across Jamaica Bay. The meeting was attended by prominent property owners and borough officials.

Maurice E. Connolly, President of the Borough of Queens, urged immediate appeal to the Governor and Legislature for necessary legislation to enable the boulevard to be constructed upon trestle work over lands under water in Jamaica Bay still controlled by the State. If immediate action can be secured by Governor Whitman, Mr. Connolly said, more than six months' time can be saved in the construction of the boulevard.

Commissioner of Public Works Newcomb, and C. U. Powell, Chief Engineer of the Topographical Bureau of Queens, and C. E. Trout, engineer of the Dock Department, also urged prompt action upon the part of property owners.

T. C. McKennee, representing the property owners from Rockaway, who presided at the meeting, appointed two delegates from each section bordering the line of the boulevard, and instructed them to proceed to Albany at once and lay the matter before the Governor.

The Cross Bay Boulevard, according to Mr. Connolly, will be one of the greatest improvements in the Borough of Queens, and will be the means of opening up the Rockaways to automobile and vehicular traffic. The boulevard will shorten the distance to Rockaway by fourteen miles, and being 100 feet in width, will afford ample space for traffic.

Chief Engineer Powell reported that the final maps had been drawn as ordered by the Board of Estimate. The cost of the boulevard has been agreed upon by the Borough Presidents of Manhattan, Brooklyn, and Queens and by the property owners of Rockaway, who will pay approximately 50 per cent. of its cost.

The boulevard also will serve as a line of quick communication for Fort Funston recently established at Rockaway Point, and will thus have great military value.

FIFTH AVENUE MEDALS.

Design Selected as Award for Most Artistic Building of Year.

The design for the Fifth Avenue Association's building medal was selected last week. The design was the gift of Michael Dreicer, First Vice President of the association. It represents on the obverse a reproduction of the Washington Square Arch and on the reverse is an inscription designating the character of the award within a laurel wreath.

At the suggestion of the Committee on Architectural Harmony, the Fifth Avenue Association about four months ago decided to institute the annual award of two medals for the encouragement of artistic design in building construction on and adjacent to the avenue. The medals will be awarded for the first time this Winter and will be given, respectively, to the best new building erected within the year and to the best alteration of a building for business purposes.

The award will be made by a jury consisting of architects and business men. In the decision as to the award the elements considered will not only be those of general aesthetic effect, but also the element of relation of any particular design as executed to the design of the buildings neighboring upon it on either side, and the effect of the new building or alteration as seen from up and down the avenue at a distance. In other words, the association is anxious to insure harmony as much as to improve individual design.

Keep Queens Freight Moving.

The Queens Chamber of Commerce has issued a number of posters, done in patriotic colors, appealing to shippers and receivers of freight in Queens and the railroads to co-operate with the Government in relieving the demands on shipping facilities. The posters ask shippers and receivers to load cars to marked capacity and 10 per cent. above wherever possible; to unload cars within twenty-four hours; to immediately remove inbound shipments from freight houses and to deliver shipments at freight houses early in the day.

Apartment Leases.

Douglas L. Elliman & Co. leased an apartment in The Mansions, 270 Park Avenue, for the Vanderbilt Avenue Realty Corporation to C. A. Spreckels, President of the Federal Sugar Refining Company; also a furnished apartment at 570 Park Avenue for Mrs. John E. McGowan to Lieutenant E. Roland Harriman, son of the late E. H. Harriman.

Pease & Elliman have rented furnished for A. F. Adams his apartment in the Montana, at 375 Park Avenue, to Mrs. Francis Burton Harrison.

Sale of Brooklyn Lots.

The Bond and Mortgage Guarantee Company has instructed the Jere Johnson, Jr., Company to sell at public auction on Columbus Day, Friday, Oct. 12, on the premises at 2:30 P. M., forty-four Brooklyn lots on Third and Marine Avenues, Ninety-seventh and Ninety-ninth Streets, one block from the Shore Road in the Bay Ridge section.

Improving Shore Front Property.

Fifty acres of the shore front at Baldwin Harbor are now being dredged and a new chain of waterways is being created preliminary to a more extensive building campaign in that Long Island south shore home colony.

INCREASE IN NEW YORK REALTY VALUES HIGHER ASSESSMENT IN EVERY BOROUGH

Over $55,000,000 in New Structures Saved Manhattan Real Estate from Decreasing---Big Advance in Queens and Staten Island---$4,500,000 Added to Equitable Building.

A STUDY of the assessed valuations of New York City realty, as announced by the Tax Commissioners last week, reveals the fact that new building operations completed within the year saved Manhattan realty values from showing a decrease. With the exception of Manhattan, all of the other four boroughs showed actual increases in land values, the greater part of which, in the Bronx, Brooklyn, and Queens, was due to the completion and recent opening of additional rapid transit lines.

Outside of the real estate assessed for corporations, which, in the case of Manhattan, show an increase of only $226,710, the net increase of Manhattan realty, including all improvements, was $39,990,160, while the increase on improvements, the greater amount of which is for new buildings, was $55,748,100. This represents a total of 330 new buildings which enhanced the taxable values of Manhattan. Brooklyn, which contributed the largest borough increase, added $30,561,275 for 3,277 new structures, while the total realty increase was $43,614,506. Queens comes next with an increase of $13,762,160 for 3,365 new buildings, and a total realty increase of $20,371,217.

The Bronx added 516 new buildings to the tax list, representing $13,024,775 for increased improvements, while, with the enhanced land values, the net increase for that borough was $17,359,450. Richmond, with 903 new buildings, giving an increase of $2,934,960, has a net realty increase of $8,849,490, showing the largest proportionate gain of any borough. These figures do not include the realty assessed with corporations. The total increase for the entire city, including corporation realty, is $137,369,758. The new buildings in the five boroughs were 8,391.

The land value increase on Staten Island has occasioned some surprise among brokers who are not actively associated with developments in that borough. Most of this increase is due, it was said last week, to the enhanced values of water-front property along the western section, taking in the Kill van Kull and Staten Island Sound waters all the way to Tottenville at the southern end of the island.

More sales of water-front property for commercial uses have been made in the last six to ten months, said an active Staten Island broker last week, than has been the case for several years. It is getting exceedingly difficult to get large and well situated water frontage and this increased demand has given a lively boost to prices in several localities. Two examples of water frontage on the western shore may be cited, one being a tract recently sold for $80,000, which was purchased less than a year ago for $34,000, and near by another sale was made for $67,000, which represented a $23,000 investment a year ago.

"Not only has water-front property increased materially, but there has been an excellent demand for home plots and farms throughout the island," said Percival G. Ullman, Jr., yesterday. "Apart from the shipbuilding and other water-front activity, there have been several other important industrial operations. Considering the general conditions, the realty situation on Staten Island is very encouraging. In many respects it is better than has been the case for five years. There has been a gradually increasing demand for bungalows and moderate-priced homes, and a large proportion of the 903 new buildings which Staten Island has added to the assessed values for 1918 were of those types."

The increase in Queens was to be expected. Values are low there, comparatively, and the borough is getting ready for a big realty increase. The extensive rapid transit developments will speedily lead to enormous improvements in many sections. The fact that 3,365 new buildings have been completed within the year indicates the great future for Queens Borough. By wards, the number and their valuations are:

| Ward. | Buildings. | Valuation. |
|---|---|---|
| First | 206 | $3,853,755 |
| Second | 825 | 4,809,625 |
| Third | 417 | 1,434,920 |
| Fourth | 1,622 | 3,262,840 |
| Fifth | 295 | 401,000 |
| Total | 3,365 | $13,762,160 |

The biggest net increases in valuations and in buildings are in the north side of the borough, where the influence of the elevated lines to Astoria and Corona has been felt.

The Second Ward has had the highest valuations for several years owing to the big developments at Ridgewood and Forest Hills. This year the erection of houses and apartments in the Jackson Heights, Woodside, and Corona sections kept the ward in the lead.

The Fourth Ward, with the active building operations that have followed along the new elevated line, has almost kept pace with Long Island City.

In the industrial centre of Long Island City, in the Queensboro Bridge Plaza neighborhood, increased valuations were very general. The New York Sugar Refining Company's plant is assessed at $1,500,000, an increase of $600,000. The Loose-Wiles biscuit factory is assessed at $2,025,000, an increase of $25,000, and the Ford automobile service building is valued at $950,000, an increase of $50,000.

The most remarkable increase in Manhattan of an individual holding was the Equitable building plot, which is assessed for taxation at $4,500,000 more than in 1917. Last year the valuation was $20,500,000, of which $10,000,000 represented land. The Tax Commissioners regard its value for 1918 as $25,000,000, of which the land figures at $13,000,000, representing an increase within twelve months of $3,000,000 on land and $1,500,000 on the building. As explained by the Commissioners, a large part of this advance was due to the completion of the building, as several floors and a portion of the Nassau Street frontage were unfinished when the tax books closed last year.

There has been practically no change in the downtown Broadway buildings. The No. 1 Wall Street corner is one of the exceptions, a reduction of $40,000 from the 1917 figures having been made, the forthcoming assessment being $710,000. Another exception is that of the Mutual Life Insurance building, assessed at $9,500,000, as against $9,900,000 a year ago. The depreciation is wholly on the building, the land value of $6,300,000 remaining the same. The Woolworth building is at $9,500,000 and the other neighboring skyscrapers remain unchanged in value.

Comparatively little change has been made in the Times Square section. Slight advances have been made in the growing business area north of Forty-seventh to Fifty-ninth Streets. A reduction of $100,000 was made on the Hotel Knickerbocker, the most striking evidence of lower assessments in the Times Square area. The Breslin, Martinique, and Imperial Hotels, below Thirty-fourth Street, have been reduced. The McAlpin remains unchanged at $9,450,000, heading the list of hotels in Manhattan for realty value. Most of the big hostelries in the hotel centre are unchanged. A partial list of some of the leading hotels, with their assessed values for 1918 and 1917, is:

|---|---|---|
| McAlpin | $9,450,000 | $9,450,000 |
| Biltmore | 8,700,000 | 8,700,000 |
| Waldorf | 3,375,000 | 3,375,000 |
| Astoria | 4,300,000 | 4,300,000 |
| Knickerbocker | 3,750,000 | 3,800,000 |
| Martinique | 2,290,000 | 2,390,000 |
| Imperial | 3,325,000 | 3,525,000 |
| Breslin | 1,450,000 | 1,500,000 |
| Wallick | 1,325,000 | 1,325,000 |
| Claridge | 2,270,000 | 2,270,000 |
| Astor | 3,875,000 | 3,875,000 |
| St. Regis | 2,700,000 | 2,700,000 |
| Plaza | 8,100,000 | 8,100,000 |
| Ansonia | 3,750,000 | 3,750,000 |
| Apthorpe Apts. | 3,150,000 | 3,150,000 |
| Belnord | 3,500,000 | 3,500,000 |
| Astor Court | 2,400,000 | 2,400,000 |

The Tax Commissioners divide Manhattan into eight sections and the detailed figures for the 1918 assessment show that all but two have increased in value due to new improvements. In only two sections has there been any increase in land values. These are the first section, including the downtown office and financial section, embracing everything south of Grand and Watts Streets, and the fifth section, being the great east side residential zone east of Sixth Avenue and Central Park between Fortieth and Ninety-sixth Streets. This is also the Grand Central terminal zone with the valuable improvements on Fifth Avenue around Forty-second Street. This section has made the best sectional showing, for with $15,775,850 increase for improvement, the net increase is $20,522,350, indicating that land values have made a net increase there of nearly $5,000,000.

The first or downtown section shows a land value increase of over $2,000,000. The fourth section, being the west side residential area, taking in the territory west of Sixth Avenue and the Park between Fortieth and Ninety-sixth Streets, despite the fact that it includes the active Times Square centre and the hotel and commercial area below Fifty-ninth Street, has just about held its own in value. Building improvements made a taxable increase of $12,728,000, while the net increase for the section is $12,133,700, revealing a slight fall in land values.

The second and seventh sections show absolute losses, the former being $783,200, despite increased building improvements of $3,085,000, while the seventh section has the greatest volume of decrease on the island, $9,527,200, although there was an increase in building values there of $3,551,500. The second district embraces the area between Grand and Watt Streets on the south and Fourteenth Street on the north, between the North and East Rivers, and the seventh section, where the heaviest land value loss is shown, taxes in the west side between Ninety-sixth and 155th Streets, west of Lenox Avenue and the Harlem River.

A résumé of building and net increase or decrease for Manhattan's eight sections follows. The third section lies between Fourteenth and Fortieth Streets from river to river. The sixth section is the Harlem area, east of the Park and Lenox Avenue, from Ninety-sixth Street north to the Harlem River line, and the eighth section embraces all of upper Manhattan above 155th Street.

| Sec. | New Bldgs. | Inc. for Buildings. | Net Increase. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | 15 | $6,092,000 | $8,748,800 |

| 8 | 91 | 5,309,500 | 4,553,810 |
| | 330 | $55,748,100 | $39,990,160 |

*Net Decrease.

To this total for Manhattan is added an increase in real estate of corporations of $226,710, giving a grand total of $40,216,870 increase in Manhattan assessed value, or only $15,000,000 less than the increase due to new buildings.

Among the more important buildings which have been increased in value are:

| Building. | 1918. | 1917. |
|---|---|---|
| Equitable Building | $25,000,000 | $20,500,000 |

THE EQUALIZATION OF STATE TAXES

A long step toward the equalization of up-State real estate values is shown by the fact that this year the City of New York is liable for 64.8 per cent. of the direct State tax while in 1914 it was obliged to pay 69.2 per cent. of the levy.

For years the ratios of assessed values to actual value allowed to many of the up-State counties were very much out of line with the facts.

Martin Saxe, who recently resigned as president of the State Tax Commission, discussing the equalization of up-State valuations, said:

"It is interesting to note some of the results by a comparison of the equalization figures in 1914, before the Commission took office, with those adopted within the last few days by the State Board of Equalization.

"The ratios of assessed value to actual value allowed to many of the up-State counties down to 1915 were notoriously out of line with the facts. Reductions from ten to twenty-two points in various up-State counties are shown by comparison of the table of rates adopted this year with those used in 1914.

"Outside of the counties composing the City of New York only twelve counties have received an increased ratio since 1914, and in the City of New York the County of New York has been increased three points and Kings and Bronx each two points.

When it is borne in mind that the practice of undervaluation in the up-State counties reduces the average rate of assessment throughout the State, so that counties having a higher ratio than the average ratio receive a credit to the amount of the difference, an increase in New York City and a decrease in the up-State counties decidedly lightens the actual burden on the former, as approximately two-thirds of the State's entire assessed valuation of real estate is in the City of New York.

"The amounts deducted from the assessed valuation of real property in the City of New York, by way of credit for the ratio of assessment in the city as compared with the average ratio of assessment throughout the State, covering 1914, the year preceding the incumbency of the present Commission, and 1915, 1916 and 1917, the period of the State tax administration by the present Commission, are as follows:

|---|---|
| 1914 | $445,517,652 |
| 1915 | 532,265,012 |
| 1916 | 656,615,125 |
| 1917 | 747,541,040 |

"It is apparent from the foregoing that between 1914 and 1917 the City of New York has gained a credit on its assessed valuation of over $300,000,000.

"Under the equalization table of 1914 the City of New York was liable for 69.2 per cent. of the direct tax, and under the table adopted this year the City of New York is liable for 64.8 per cent., a gain of 4.4 per cent. in the city's favor in three years.

"While I voted against the table adopted by the State Board of Equalization this year, just as I did last year, because I felt that in some instances the rates given by a majority of the board to some of the up-State counties were too high, still, the result, as a whole, proves that the City of New York benefits even more than it did last year by an increased credit on the assessed value of nearly [illegible]."

FLANDERS VICTORY RIVALS MARNE BATTLE

Germans Lose Important Ridge Positions and May Be Forced to Give Up Belgian Lines—Allied Successes on Italian Front and in Mesopotamia.

By a Military Expert.

Copyright, 1917, by The New York Times Company.

THE most important fighting of the week again occurred in Flanders, where General Haig has won what may well prove to be the greatest single allied victory since the Marne. His two former attacks east of Ypres had filled the Germans with alarm. His successes against the Messines and Passchendaele Ridge had threatened a section of the Belgian coast so essential to the Germans in their sea campaign against the world's commerce. Alarmed at the progress he had made, the Germans, during the week, had indulged in a series of heavy but fruitless counterattacks in a vain attempt to recover a part of the lost ground.

The most important bit of ground was that about Polygon Wood, about two miles due south of Zonnebeke. The importance of the wood lies in the fact that it is at the widest part of the ridge which runs from Passchendaele to Gheluvelt. North of Polygon Wood the ridge narrows as a result of two forks, one running northwest, which was already in British hands before the attack was delivered, and the other running northeast, forming what is called the Passchendaele Ridge. Polygon Wood, therefore, may be termed the pedestal on which rested the defense of the Belgian coast. The German counterattacks were delivered mainly against this position and succeeded in reoccupying a small corner of the wood east of the race track, which is in its centre.

All during the German attacks the British guns were extremely busy. This fire was interpreted to be defensive. An attack was unlooked for, as never since the fighting on the west has been in progress has an attack been made while a counterattack was in progress. The invariable procedure had been to wait until the Germans had worn themselves out and the force of the countermovement had been expended before driving ahead.

General Haig therefore took the Germans by complete surprise. Early on Thursday morning the barrage fire opened. By a fortuitous chance the Germans, with carefully picked troops, had already formed for another counterattack. These troops were caught in the barrage, which seems to grow heavier with each battle, and literally cut to pieces. The German plans were thus suddenly thrown away, and before they could be changed or modified the British infantry was well on its way forward.

The front attacked was between a point just to the north of Langemarck and Gheluvelt. Everywhere, the Germans, for the moment completely demoralized both by the terrible artillery fire and the unexpectedness of the attack, gave way. It was inconceivable that the British had planned to go so far ahead. All the odds were against them. Not only were the Germans heavily massed on the front, both for the purposes of their counterattacks, but also to defend their own positions, but the possesion of the Passchendaele Ridge was such a great advantage that it was thought a gradual advance lasting over several weeks, or possibly until Winter, would be necessary.

But such was the condition of the defense when the first objectives were reached that the British forces did not stop until practically the entire Passchendaele Ridge was occupied. Two small tongues of high land which break out from the ridge alone remain in German hands. The more southern of these extends due east from Polygon Wood and contains the village of Becelaere. The other juts out from near the village of Passchendaele and extends southeast toward the tip of the first, a distance of about a mile and a half separating the two, which thus inclose a narrow strip of perfectly flat country about two miles deep and about a mile wide.

At no time since the battle of Flanders began have the Germans lost such valuable ground. If the Germans continued to hold the narrow ridge which extends north from Gheluvelt their coastal possessions were safe. With this lost, their whole line to the north was in great danger and would have to fall back. There was no alternative. There did not seem to be any immediate danger of this part of the high ground falling into British hands. In the north, the British line was nearly two full miles to the east of the village of Passchendaele. At no point were the British lines nearer than one mile to the crests.

But the unexpected happened, and the Germans lost everything of value. The Menin-Roulers railway is now less than six miles away from the new lines, and, running across the flats, with the British on the hill, is in plain view. With glasses, every train which runs along it is in plain view. The village of Roulers is also in plain view, open to attack by artillery even of moderate calibres. It will therefore be impossible for the Germans to move trains over this line except at night, and even then, with the British having the range accurately, the road can be made practically impassable. A German retirement from this section is thus foreshadowed, and, although another attack may be sustained before it occurs, it would not be surprising if it came immediately.

Not since the Russian drive of last June has any week held as good news for the Allies as that just passed. On three fronts the Teutonic allies have been most soundly beaten. On one—the Mesopotamian—the defeat was in a territory which is, as yet, subsidiary. But in the other two not only are the possible. Therefore, the Italians were compelled to take both of the first two positions. But in the case of San Daniele there is no reason why a masking operation is not perfectly feasible and an operation which can be carried out much more cheaply than if the position were stormed. As a matter of fact, it will not be necessary completely to mask it by establishing a cordon of troops around it. Just as soon as it becomes evident to the Austrians that it is either a case of getting out or being cut off, they will get out and make good their retreat if possible.

Apparently it is such a masking operation that is a part of the last thrust forward. Just east of the southern point of the great bend of the Isonzo, north of Gorizia, the Italian line has come to halt on the slopes of Monte San Gabriele. North and south of that point it has pushed ahead, leaving San Gabriele almost as a point projecting westward into the Italian general line. As the two flanks move still further to the east this point will, of course, deepen, and the narrow strip of territory included by the two flanks will be all that is left in Austrian hands.

In Their Latest Advance the British Have Taken All the Important High Ground of the So-called Passchendaele Ridge, Driving the Germans to Low and Disadvantageous Positions. Last Week's Bitterest Fighting Was Around Poelcappelle, Broodseinde, the Gheluvelt.

The first news to reach us of these attacks was from Italy, and was a continuation of the Italian effort to take the Bainsizza Plateau. The effort was made against what may be called the crucial point in the entire Chiapovano Valley, which is the immediate Italian objective. It will be recalled that the entire object of the Italians in this quarter is to sever the connection between the northern and southern wings of the Austrian Army by cutting the solitary line of communication between them. This line is the road which runs down the Chiapovano Valley from Tolmino-land and finally winds its way westward to Gorizia.

At the point where it turns west, after coming down due south, is found the little village of Loqua. Near this village a road leaves the main valley road and leads into the main road from Gorizia to Laibach. It is this little connecting road from Loqua, which furnishes the last link binding together the Austrian armies of the north and south. If, therefore, the Chiapovano Valley can be reached at or near the point where this connecting link leaves it, the effect will be just as great as if the entire Bainsizza Plateau were occupied.

As was stated last week, the report that the Italians had completed the conquest of the Bainsizza was misleading. What they had done up to the end of last week was merely to consolidate their new positions and make them secure against counterattacks. They were then ready to launch another forward drive. Their first operation was to advance along the line of heights which skirt along the southern boundary of the Bainsizza, and which mark its termination. The ground between these heights and the village of Bainsizza, which is located about the middle of the plateau, is generally level, without any predominating feature. Once the Italians gained this high ground, the entire Austrian position, which was a salient jutting into the Italian lines, was exposed and a hurried withdrawal became necessary. The Italian line, pivoting on the village of Bainsizza, swung forward, in some places for more than a mile. At the same time the forces which took the heights spread out up the line of the valley. Soon the entire valley, from the village of Madoni to the Isonzo, was in Italian hands, and a new line was established, which ran from Bainsizza through Madoni to the lip of the plateau. Here the line turns rather sharply westward, following the valley line along the northern slopes of San Gabriele, where it turns south toward Gorizia.

There is another object also in this move of the Italians along the heights of southern Bainsizza. The fighting at Gabriele has been very severe, although the crest is apparently safe in their hands. Just a little further to the east is San Daniele, the last of the great mountain barriers which hold the Italians back from their advance along the Rainizza Plateau, which is just south of the Bainsizza. In other words, San Daniele still blocks the way to the sole connecting road I have mentioned between the two Austrian armies. There are two ways of handling such a situation. One is to storm the heights just as was done in the case of Monte Santo and San Gabriele. This is expensive, but in some cases necessary. In fact, it was necessary in both cases.

The second way is to treat them as an independent fortress and mask it—passing on beyond until starvation makes it yield to its besiegers. This was the way, for example, by which the Russians captured Przemysl in Galicia in their first march to Cracow, preceding the battle of the Carpathians. Where three fortresses are in supporting distance of each other, and particularly where two of the three command the other and the surrounding country as well, this is not the straightening out of the line by snuffling out this strip will then be a simple operation, and will involve the fall of the remainder of the slopes of Monte San Gabriele and of San Daniele.

The battle in Mesopotamia, which resulted in the capture by the British of the village of Ramadi, is one of those illuminating incidents of the war which have come so infrequently, demonstrating that, in spite of the development of trench warfare, the old idea of strategy, based on surprise made possible by great mobility, has not entirely died. In fact, the entire Mesopotamian campaign of the British has been in its essential elements strategical rather than tactical. This distinction is seen when the Mesopotmian situation is compared to that which exists on the western front. In the latter case strategy, as the term has always been understood, has no longer a place; the very existence of permanent trenches is anathema to the term.

The successes of the British, while based on elements of skillful leadership, is due entirely to the tactics employed—the unprecedented use of artillery in overwhelming quantities. In Mesopotamia it is a war of movement. The mechanical superiority of one combatant over the other has not been marked. The advantage in numbers if on either side has rested with the Turks. And yet, the past year has been for the Turks an unending series of disasters.

The answer is found in the skill of the British leader, in the genius of General Maude's strategy. The British have not been altogether easy about the situation in the Near East. Press reports have been frequent that the German General Falkenhayn had gone east and taken command, and that the Turkish Army, stiffened by the presence of certain elements of German strength, were being refitted and reorganized in such a way as to render an offensive by them a difficult matter to check. Inasmuch as the only time of the year when fighting is at all possible in this section is the Winter, (this by reason of the terrific heat,) there was always the possibility that the German attack would be launched when the fighting on the other fronts had ceased and the troops settled down to await the coming of Spring. Maude's stroke may have a material effect on their plans.

The Turks, apparently, were preparing just such a move when Maude struck. They had concentrated at the village of Ramadi a large store of supplies, both food and military, preparatory to moving down the Euphrates River, following the southern bank, with the idea of cutting in behind the British who, after the capture of Bagdad, had moved north up the Tigris to Samara, (the end of the Bagdad Railroad as far as it has been completed,) and had at the same time spread out southward as far as the northern bank of the Euphrates. By following the south bank of the river eastward the Turks, if successful in their surprise movement, would be thrown to the rear of the British forces and so threaten their lines of communication.

As General Maude has a complement of airplanes for observation purposes, he undoubtedly discovered that a concentration was being made and guessed accurately its object. He moved forward, following directly up the southern bank of the river, and his infantry seized a group of low heights about four miles east of the town. He then did exactly the same thing that Lee did at Chancellorsville when he detached a heavy column, under Jackson, from his main body and sent it down the flank road to fall on Hooker's flank.

The British column which was detached left the river, manoeuvred to the south of the Turkish position and thereby reached its flank, at the same time that a cavalry column, having greater mobility, reached to the west of the Ramadi position and occupied the low ridge which forms the eastern boundary of the little valley of Amih. The Turks then were surrounded.

The DUO-ART PIANO

Harold Bauer

HAROLD BAUER. "The value of the Duo-Art is obvious. In addition to furnishing everyone a means of musical expression it reproduces the best aesthetic conceptions of the world's leading artists."

THE Duo-Art is a new type of pianoforte. Like that well-known instrument, it answers to the touch of the pianist's fingers upon its keyboard. In tone and in form it is a pianoforte of the highest modern development.

But unlike the piano the Duo-Art is not a passive instrument whose voice is lifted only at command of the gifted artist's agile hands. The sensitive Duo-Art action guided by Duo-Art Records of the finest interpretations by the world's greatest pianists, reproduces these performances with such perfect mimicry as almost to outrival the artist's recitals in the concert halls.

The Duo-Art immortalizes the fine art of pianism—makes its rarest and highest examples available in the home. And it is yet an instrument for self-expression, a piano or a player-piano, a new and perfected player-piano far in advance of any other instrument of the type. The Duo-Art is made in Steinway, Weber, Steck and Stroud models.

SAYS PRO-GERMANS SEEK ECONOMY HERE

Charles W. Mears Argues That Business Must Go On as Usual or We Cannot Win the War.

POINTS TO CASE OF BRITAIN

France, Too, He Says, Had to Come to Us for Assistance Because They Could Not Fight and Produce.

Advocating a vigorous policy of "business as usual" for the United States, and asserting that the cry of "stop spending money," an outgrowth of the declaration of war, encourages false economy in buying and is nothing more than a German-made plan to bring about our defeat, Charles W. Mears, advertising manager of the Winton Company, in an address at a meeting of the Cleveland Advertising Club last week, pointed out that it was the patriotic duty of the American people to live up to their accustomed standards. Without a live market, he argued, we could not win the war; without active buying of things normally bought, there would be no live market.

"We can keep the market going prosperously only by living as nearly as possible on our normal planes," added Mr. Mears; "by working faithfully at our business; by eating all that we require to keep us in good health; by wearing the kind of clothing to which we are accustomed; by building and furnishing the homes we need—in short, by earning and spending.

"Earning and spending depend upon each other. If people earn without spending, earnings eventually stop. If people spend without earning, the spending supply eventually runs out. There is no miracle about it. We spend because we have earned and we are able to earn because we spend. Through this process the United States has become the greatest of nations. Let this process stop and we shall cease to be great.

Answers Cries for Savings.

"At no time since our declaration of war have we been permitted to forget that the war will require tremendous sums of money. And at frequent intervals, since the declaration of war, we have been told that it is the duty of every real American to save every available dollar he can lay his hands upon in order that the Government may have it for war use. A circular from a New York bond house a few days ago declared:

We must spend less and save more. Not only must we save to win the war, but we must save if we are to survive.

"From the constant repetition of the 'stop spending money' cry it is evident that somebody believes that it is the one true doctrine. If it is the one true doctrine, then it is obvious that the business man who disregards it, who urges people to spend their money for his goods, is a menace to the interests, the welfare, the life of his nation.

"A business man recently wrote the following to me:

If I want to buy a new car this Fall, but instead should refrain from doing so, I should have $2,000 or $3,000 which the Government can take away from me and give to you for building an airplane. The energy which must be devoted to fighting the war cannot also be devoted to building automobiles. Real patriotism would require the discontinuance of motor-car manufacture, and the substitution of the manufacture of things required by the Government for fighting the war.

"To this straightforward letter we replied:

Government Well Provided

If you should buy a new car this Fall, it is true the Government would be unable to take that $2,000 or $3,000 from you, but it could take it from us, or from those to whom we passed it along. It amounts to this: If the Government needs money, it will get money from those who have it; if the Government needs materials or supplies of any kind, it will get them from those who have them. The Government is fully able to take care of itself. But if we permit industry to lag, we shall be placing upon the shoulders of the Government a new burden aside from war—the burden of unemployment, hunger, and financial distress at home.

Mr. Mears said that his correspondent replied, saying that the "business as usual" policy would do more harm to this country than it did to England; that there were only two sources from which to derive the human energy required to fight this war, the first, reserve energy, by which production could be increased by better organization and longer hours, and the other transfer energy, by giving up such things as we can get along without; the utilization of our workmen and our plants for the production of enormous quantities of war materials.

"Because the nation has taken on a new program of tremendous proportions," continued Mr. Mears," namely, war, the industrial fabric of the United States is likely to be altered. We cannot have business as usual; we must have business unusual. And that does not mean that all other trains must be taken from the rails.

Industrial Work Must Go On.

"Considering the economic side of the matter, the 'stop spending' policy may be likened to a giant who comes by night and takes funds from the manufacturer's till, and then in the morning appears at the manufacturer's front door and exchanges those funds for goods. Repeat this process long enough, and eventually the manufacturer would have neither money nor goods.

"There is only one preventive. The industrial machine of the country must do business with others than the Government in order to get really paid for goods. And this volume of non-war business must be big enough and produce profits great enough to meet all the expenses of the business, and in addition to stand the strain of the giant's night visits. Hence unless our non-war business can be made to pay for the war, the war will eat us down to poverty.

"The Government has the power to get what it wants, where, and when it wants it. But business which supports the Government and pays all its bills, has no power to commandeer anything. I am convinced of the fact that business is our source of welfare in both peace and war, and until the necessity arises let us support the Government by earning money through our accustomed business channels.

"Now, in fact, France and England did give up business as usual, but in so doing they confessed their material and physical weakness, their inability to meet all the demands of war. They could only fight, and they did fight, and are fighting, but they could not do much else. The reason the Allies were forced to come to this country for financial aid was because their business was forced partially to suspend, and their people were warned to hoard their money. When American business suspends this country will be bankrupt, and since we have no prosperous ally, our fate will be without remedy.

Encouraging Stagnation Is Folly.

"Furthermore, there is no greater folly than the encouraging of the stagnation of business as an alleged assistance to the Government. Most of us Americans believe that our Government is fully capable of carrying on the war successfully. What assistance the Government needs from business men will be gladly given by business men. Our Government does not undertake to promote business. It has plenty to do to promote war.

"Business men are morally bound to look out for themselves since the Government could in no wise be more severely handicapped than by the stoppage of non-interfering business; by throwing out of employment men the Government is not ready to use, by taking out of circulation money that is more readily available for Government support when it is active than when it is hidden.

"Meanwhile, let the business keep going on energetically, and ... [illegible] on a full head of steam. For above all other facts, there are four or five that are vital to our freedom and our life. They are:

"1. War requires both men to fight and men to produce what fighters need.

"2. At the same time those at home must be fed, clothed, housed, and employed.

"3. If a nation cannot provide for its people both at the front and at home, that nation will go down to defeat in a long war, unless some other nation comes to its rescue and supplies its necessities.

"4. England and France could not fight and produce. That is why they were compelled to call upon us in their desperate need.

"5. If the United States is not big enough to provide for England and France, and for our soldiers at the front and in training, and for our own people at home, what nation, in God's name, will fly to our help with men and money, and food ad guns?

"And, personally, it would not surprise me a bit, if it were to be proved that this 'stop spending money' cry is nothing else than part of the Kaiser's German-made plans to hasten our defeat."

TRUCKS ON TEST RUN.

Twelve, with Soldiers and Supplies, to Make 115-Mile Trip.

The War Department plans to find out definitely how much help it can obtain in transporting men and supplies over the highways instead of by train. On Oct. 11 six two-ton trucks will leave the Post Quartermaster's warehouse at Atlanta, Ga., on a 115-mile run to Fort Ogelthorpe, Ga. These trucks will carry loads of supplies. At the same time a special passenger truck will transport sixteen soldiers with their guns, ammunition, and full field equipment from Fort McPherson to Fort Oglethorpe. Records of time and cost of the trips will be kept. This information will not only include the facts relating to the actual runs, but also the time and cost of loading and unloading the supplies, weather and road conditions, and the behavior of the trucks.

The War Department's runs will be made over a section of the Dixie Highway, a route which has already been found available, in sections, for the transportation of military supplies. But there are many parts of the country where such routes do not exist, and in this connection The Engineering News-Record was led to make the following comments on the highway situation in its bearing on freight congestion on the railroads:

"There is imperative demand for a thorough study of the highway situation. It may lead to the conclusion that a Federal highway board is needed—comparable to the Railroads' War Board—to place our highways in a position to be operated at maximum efficiency as a relief for railroad congestion. If one further word is needed to point the urgency of the situation, one needs only to recall that upon our entrance into the war various agencies were discouraging a continuance of highway building. Now we are awake to the situation. We know that foodstuffs that should go to Europe may rot oin the farm for lack of adequate transportation, and that our fighting strength overseas may be seriously affected because of the difficulty of getting munitions from the inland factories to the seaboard. Under these conditions action is necessary, and the first step, so far as highways are concerned, is the provision, through the office of public roads or otherwise, for an immediate careful survey of the situation.

NEW AUTO DIMMER LAW.

Maine's New Regulation Fixes Headlight's Candle Power.

Maine's new headlight dimmer law, which went into effect recently, limits the candle power of headlights. Main provisions are:

(1) No bulb or lamp used in any such headlight shall be of greater candle power than 24, (or equivalent wattage.)

(2) The lens or glass in the front part of any such light (if the lens be of plain glass) shall be sandblasted or frosted on the inside so that no direct or reflected ray from said light shall be on a level road and seventy-five (75) feet ahead of any such motor vehicle, more than forty-two (42) inches from the ground.

Electric street car lights are also regulated, which many motorists claim should be done everywhere, as follows:

No electric street car shall be operated upon or along any street or highway within this State after dark with lighted arc headlight unless such headlight is constructed and operated in the following manner, viz.:

Each such headlight shall have in front of the arclight a lens of uncolored glass, sandblasted or frosted on the inside so that there will be left on the lower half of such lens a formation of plain glass. The highest point of the half-circle arc, the radius of which shall be 2½ inches, forming the upper portion of such formation, shall be no more than 4¾ inches from the bottom of said lens.

TRUCKS INTO WAR'S MAW.

Train Captain Tells How They Are Used Up on Battle Front.

W. Owen Thomas, who has been in France in charge of the Canadian mechanical transport, said regarding war wear and tear, after his return to Detroit:

"If all of the allowances for repair and replacement were used up in any given period and charged at the same rate as the parts in the original truck, each original truck had been entirely replaced in value after about eight months of service. Actually, the list of replacement parts is always large enough to maintain more than a balance, so that the nominal life of the truck is for a slightly longer period. With this life, the investment for trucks and replacement parts, free on board factory, averages about $16 per day per truck in service, which for war conditions is a very creditable showing for mechanical transport.

"The need for standardizing parts cannot be too strongly emphasized. With this accomplished, the trucks in war service may be made to give longer service than those I observed. However, the greatest advantage of standardization is in the possibility of saving invaluable time when repairs or replacements are necessary."

THE SMALL COLLEGE OF THE PRESENT DAY

By Lyman P. Powell,
President of Hobart College.

It is easier now to determine why is the small college than what it is. Once our universities were small colleges. Harvard, dating from 1636, was a small college within the memory of the late Edward Everett Hale. It was only the other day that some aged man died who remembered Yale when it was not as big as Amherst is today, and as for Dartmouth, it is only a few years ago that the student membership was so small that people liked to speak of it as a small college, while today it is so big that one can fancy the student from the West saying as he crosses the campus, to some friendly interlocutor, "Looking for somebody? Why, I don't know a soul east of the Rockies."

Here and there the small college still survives, but it is—if I may use the only Latin quotation of which I am sure—one of those "rari nantes in gurgite vasto." There are a few small colleges that stay small, and unless some of them mend their ways they will grow yet smaller as the years go by; for supporters are not going to confuse smallness with inefficiency, and the small college, however small, must function efficiently, or it will cease to have a reason for existence. But here and there you find a small college of which the alumni can proudly, as well as truly, say, with Daniel Webster, "It is a small college. And yet there are those who love it."

The small college is the real college. It has no ambition to be a university. It is not tainted seriously with the distinctively university spirit. It still stands for general mental discipline, a liberal outlook on life, and what we call cultural interests, without longer narrowing the term merely to the pursuit of classical study.

The small college today must serve a valid purpose. It cannot rest upon the laurels of the past, though in memory of the great and good who have gone from our own Hobart College we are planning a series of memorial days, when students may hear from the chapel chancel about men whose reputation is known wherever fine scholarship, real culture, and careful consideration of responsibility are appreciated.

The small college today must do well its own special work. Problems it has. What live institution has not problems, whether it is big or little? The small college has suffered much through the persistence of puerilities, but they are going. Sense and solidarity are taking their place. Brutal "hazing," vulgar "horsing," premature "rushing," vulgar "paddling," and excessive drinking, made possible by scholarship funds given to the college by good Christians, are going because they have to go—and they are going rapidly because they cannot withstand the pitiless publicity of good breeding.

The small college is now learning the proper way to treat new students. It has to, else they will go to some other place, as they ought. It is the business especially of the small college to make the new student welcome.

At Hobart the Faculty and I set in motion the machinery for the establishment of student self-government. I recall how some of the students, when they found that we recommended a representative student government body, chosen by the students themselves, of seven, supplemented by three members of the Faculty, to sit with the students and advise them, ominously protested against the projection of Faculty membership into a student government body. Believing that the cure for the ills of democracy is more democracy, the Faculty and I smilingly directed the students to choose their own members of the Faculty for the government body, and as one of them, since graduated, said to me in the inelegant language of a college student, "There doesn't seem to be any kick coming to us."

Student government is going to win out everywhere, and President and Faculty are not going to waste their time over details of student discipline when right-minded upper classmen, with the administration behind them, can do the things much more effectively themselves. Our experience is, I find, duplicated the whole country over.

Of course, every college has its faults, but the faults of the small college are no graver than the faults of the big university, and many believe not so grave. The unthinking—as a sentimental woman once said to me—"just dote on finding fault with college students." Even some who think they think confuse faults with growing pains, and after having visited many of the large and small colleges in this country I am glad, from personal experience and even longer observation to confirm the words of the Hon. Elihu Root:

The American boy has better chances for education, for training, for making a true success of his life in a small college removed from the great centres of population, where the students are brought into intimate contact with their instructors, where the air is full of college spirit, and where the college is the all in all of college life.

I admit the problems of the small college. If it had no problems it certainly would never claim my interest. Further, it is going to work out its problems, and while here and there a small college will and ought to be absorbed into a university or to become a junior college, there will be colleges left, like Amherst, Middlebury, Trinity, Hamilton, Hobart, Grinnell, and the lusty infant Reed, which are not going to be absorbed and are not going to become junior colleges. The work they are doing is too important. The place they fill no large institution can ever fill, and yet they have their problems.

How, for instance, shall we keep alumni attached by all the bonds of normal life? Of course, money has to be raised, and colleges have to depend on students and alumni to help along. But there must be some other bond as well as the financial one. Love must be kept warm as among friends. When the President drops in to see a prosperous alumnus he must not have "one auspicious and one dropping eye." He must not give the impression of being a pedagogical pickpocket. He must not seem to be a menace to the private purse. He must behave so that whatever the alumni can do, directly or indirectly, for the financial upbuilding of the college, they will want to do, though now and then a word in season about money will not go amiss. But I am more concerned to see the college retain its alumni by loving them without ulterior motive. Every college ought to send out to each alumnus, as Dr. Clyde Furst of the Carnegie Foundation has hinted, a calendar every year containing pictures perhaps of the old buildings dear to the alumnus or famous athletic teams or portraits of those whom they have loved and lost a while from the Faculty.

Even if there were no other reason, it would be well worth while for every college President to spend a few weeks every year in New York City simply to meet, at such a place as the City Club, his fellow-college Presidents, to have his own experiences checked off or corrected, to be confirmed in his good resolutions, to lose his discouragements, to attach more closely old friends and make new ones. I suppose that is why a college President said to me the other day: "Every college President ought to be condemned to spend at least a month each year at the City Club learning that his fellow-Presidents have as hard a job as his."

Now, we must make haste slowly, we of the small college. Cornell is big enough to try out the experiment of Faculty participation in Trustee councils, but the small college in the small town, where everybody knows everybody else, would add to its perplexities and problems by becoming

I am not unduly conservative. I have an eye upon the future. My plea is simply that the small college must look upon the future from an angle somewhat different from that of the big university. The small college, after all, is not to prepare men to make a living. It is to prepare men to live and to make them able to specialize more quickly and more intelligently than those who have not caught the secret of the smaller college.

Admitting that the problem of the small college is far different from that of the large college or the university, it still is true that the small college of a generation ago was getting a different class of students from the small college of today. A far larger percentage of college men fifty years ago were preparing for the ministry, or medicine, or law. The slant has changed. More men go to college now who mean to make a living in the world of business. The small college cannot dodge that obvious fact. It cannot maintain precisely the same curriculum. It cannot prescribe the curriculum of a generation ago. There must be more election, and there must also be ingenuity shown in the preservation of the best of the old, and the gradual and tentative trying out of the new.

The cultivated man will always have a right to the traditions of the race. It is sheer nonsense to deny this. The cultivated man will always need to know somewhat of philosophy and psychology, because they deal with those inner problems which are the same today, yesterday, and forever. Apart from literature, languages will always remain tools which men must use to get results today if they want to know even the secrets of government at a time when the man of Continental training reads several languages. Without sacrifice of time or hurt to the curriculum, girls can learn in college how to make pies as good as mother ever made, and at the same time learn their chemistry, to which there are various reasons why biology and physics may properly be added.

The real business of the small college today is to give an edge to teaching the older subjects; to put new faces which are more attractive on what students love to think of as old foes; to induce that general appreciation of life as it is lived today which will insure a quicker apprehension of problems, a clearer comprehension of difficulties, and a swifter power to adapt one's self to this world, which H. G. Wells has properly reminded us is a new world exchanged for the old.

This task is not so difficult as it may at first blush seem for the small college. If courses in business cannot be inserted bodily into the ordinary curriculum without dislocation of the entire scheme or the allocation of teachers of long standing to the discard, stress can at least be laid, provided the teacher is alive, on those real things, particularly in economics, which already have found a large place in the college curriculum.

Comparisons Show the Value of CONCENTRATION

From October, 1916, to June, 1917, a boy of 16 made the following record:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Plane Geometry | 88 | Algebra I | 74 |
| English I | 60 | Algebra II | 74 |
| English II | 60 | Cicero | 68 |
| French II | 60 | Advanced Latin Composition | 62 |
| Physiography | 76 | Physics | 81 |
| Chemistry | 93 | | |

The same student spent three years in a well-known preparatory school in this city, and during that time passed only two subjects.

This is only one of many excellent records made by Clark School Students.

FOUNDED 1906. For Schools, Colleges and Regents, thorough preparation in half time taken by class schools. Positively one at a time with a teacher, teaches pupil how to study and to acquire independence of thought. Supervised study periods teach pupils to concentrate.

Percentage of subjects passed in the June examinations by our pupils nearly double that of other schools. Instruction is accurately fitted for college or school pupil purposes to enter.

Some of our pupils are brilliant, some average, some below average, but all save time. The teacher studies the peculiarities and characteristics of each pupil, which is impossible in classes. Many pupils who have become discouraged in class schools have succeeded here.

Fall term opens October 1st, but pupils may begin any time. Personal interviews at home or school welcomed.
